Chris turned to Tem.

"I know Threekmorton," he said.

"What!" Tom shouted.

"If you really want to go in for aviation, il'd be gled to give, you say that!"

The ground began to sway gently beneath Mary Kate's feet. Waves—waves lifted her from the floor, and the drumming and rushing of many waters was in her ears.

"No," she whispered. "You did not say have legan.

"I know it," Chris agreed, with a brief laugh.

Mary Kate continued to stand perfectly still, her bright eyes on the group in the kitchen, or watching Cass, and wondering Tom, and Mart in the big chair, with his arms band aged, and her mother, puzzled and anxious and gentle, in the rocker. One of her hands had been locked in Chrisfingers, as she wheeled about, and their grip held, so that her arm was twisted behind her, and her bright head, with its rings of disordered coppety hair, was close to Chris's big shoulder.

"She's only a little girl—" Mrs. O'Hara said, troubled. "I don't know did you mean to say that to her—" she sided, doubtfully.

by Prof. F. O. Bower, president, at a recent meeting in the Gulid Hall presided over by the Lord Mayor.

The Imperial character of the association's work was becoming increasingly important, and consequently they wished to make the centenary this year the occasion for a strong gathering of scientific representatives of the Dominions, said Professor Bower.

General Jan Christian Smuts, former Prime Minister of South Africa, would be installed presidential elect at Albert Hall in the afternoon of September 23, and would deliver the presidential address on the same evening at Central Hail, Westminster, Professor Bower said.

Important Questions

Professor J. L. Myers, O.B.E., secretary of the association, said they were already assured of a fine gathering of the lords of scientific research from all parts of the world. Every effort was being made to secure the presentation of the outlook of scientific men on large questions of general interest and public importance.

"We have not the least intention of fostering scientific jargon," added Professor Myers.

Sir William Phene Neal, the Lord Mayor, said science was mechanizing everything, but what about manual labor? If the association could
