THE TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR HAVITY.

SYNOPSIS Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the famous actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears, leaving no trace. Dr. Cavanaugh, the great criminal psychologist, is called to get an interview with her. Dr. Cavanaugh, instead of meeting her, meets her daughter, and finds that she was engaged to him before his marriage.

CHAPTER XIV.—(Cont'd.) "You must have been with her for a long time," Dr. Cavanaugh ventured, in a voice from which he banished all undue curiosity.

"Oh, you needn't think Miss O'Shay was a has-been. She didn't have to take up with that millionaire whip-snapper because he was a last chance, not by any means. And why wouldn't she leave him, if she had a mind to, I'd like to know!"

"I know nothing about it," she said. "I was clearly not available."

"She'll be missed," he might not have meant to go. Did you ever notice in Miss O'Shay's—tacitly he avoided the title "Mrs. Ellsworth," toward which Mrs. Kane had shown such marked aversion—"any signs of eccentricity, of unstable mental balance?"

"You mean, was she crazy?" "I should not put it so strongly, but that is the idea."

"Do your doctors would learn to speak plain English, maybe fewer of your patients would die. If Miss O'Shay was crazy, I'd say it was her own business."

"Yes, it might be," Dr. Cavanaugh's tone was placating. "By the way, do you read the newspapers?" He shifted ground suddenly.

"I do read the newspapers! I've kept Miss O'Shay's scrap book of clippings since—for years. And the latest would fill a shelf as long as that, if—pointing to the book case behind him—"I'm telling you."

"Then you know," Dr. Cavanaugh's voice was still unshaken, but he was forcing the pace now. "That an identified body has been found in the tule marsh, and that I have been asked to aid in the attempt to identify it. It may be able to make that identification complete, if I can secure a hair belonging to Miss O'Shay. I came to ask if you will be so kind as to get it for me."

"For an instant Mrs. Kane's eyes widened, showing a rim of white around the iris. The nostrils of her beak-like nose flared with the sudden intake of her breath. The network of veins on her cheeks stood out against the surrounding pallor like a miniature railroad map drawn in red ink. Her lips worked convulsively.

"I'll do nothing of the sort!" she said in a high, strained voice. "And then it happened—the thing for which every one who talked with Mrs. Kane watched with horrified expectancy. Those imperfectly fitted upper teeth fell out, and clattered to the floor.

"Oh," said Dr. Cavanaugh gently. "Be sorry. Allow me." His heavy bulk covered the space between them with incredible swiftness. He stooped to recover the phantom of a white semi-circle and, as he rose, the fingers of his left hand plucked, unnoticed, a long, auburn hair from Mrs. Kane's skirt.

CHAPTER XV. Dr. Cavanaugh carefully tucked the hair between thumb and forefinger into the envelope which lay ready in his coat pocket. The gesture was apparently merely that of reaching for a folded handkerchief with which he dabbed his fingers after restoring the teeth to their owner.

"Mrs. Kane, with a sublime disregard of germs and complete lack of these 'Experts', but if he doesn't turn up anything, play it up anyway as much as you can, and we'll nurse it along. You drop everything, except Piper, and stick to Cambridge. Stick it if it takes all day. You might telephone occasionally."

"Right." Peter, the inevitable copy paper belonging from his coat pocket, lounged out of the local room. But he was out of the local room. But he was out of the local room. But he was out of the local room.

He stood for a moment outside the entrance to The Herald building, and even took a few steps in the direction of the city hall. Then he shook his head and darted across the street, pursued by indignant squawks from the horns of intervening trucks.

A moment later the spluttering with which "Boston" engines are preceded going into action was accompanied by a low, lugubrious whistle.

Peter was banking everything on a girl whom he had seen only once, a girl with whom he had matched wits as an antagonist—a girl who would have no idea what it meant to hear Jimmy say: "You may call at the cashier's desk for your money!"

"Devotion's neither here nor there," Mrs. Kane responded cryptically. "I guess I'll find out all I need to know soon enough—maybe sooner."

"Perhaps. And yet I take it you would want to do all in your power to bring the criminal—supposing there is a criminal—to justice." Dr. Cavanaugh spoke with a mild politeness, as if stating an obvious fact.

But Mrs. Kane was not accepting any statement merely because it was positively made.

"Justice!" she retorted with an angry snap of her jaws. "What good would that do? Justice generally is just somebody's fool notion of the way other folks' affairs ought to be fixed for them. Besides, you've got a long way to go to prove that there's any justice in it at all."

"Oh, yes, quite," Dr. Cavanaugh waved the point aside as if it were not worth arguing.

"I reckon a lady could leave her house without being murdered. There's plenty that does, anyway."

"Justice!" she said again. "I can't believe you were the one who was sufficiently worried by Mrs. Ellsworth's absence to notify the police."

"Yes, I did that. I arrived told you I was mad at the way Mrs. Ellsworth acted. And if Miss O'Shay comes back, she may call me a fool for my pains. It wouldn't be the first time she's done that. At any rate, letting the police know she's gone is different from getting her mixed up with the murdered corpse of some nobody touch with a ten-foot pole. If Miss O'Shay ever got killed, she'd see to it that it was done with more—more—style!"

Dr. Cavanaugh's wandering gaze unobtrusively followed the movements of Mrs. Kane's bony fingers picking at the folds of her skirt. He was listening more to the modulations of her voice than to her actual words.

Was there an undercurrent of hostility beneath the length of those disconnected conversations?

"Unfortunately, one cannot always control the elements in such a case," he said dryly. "I'm sorry you don't feel inclined to help us out; but if you won't, I suppose you won't."

"He picked up his hat and table and spoke with the mild disapproval of one who has been refused a subscription to his pet charity."

"Well, I won't, so you might just as well quit right now!" The click with which Mrs. Kane's teeth dropped into place was a very determined click indeed.

As he switched on the lights of the car, it occurred to Dr. Cavanaugh that not once had he referred to the missing woman as his mistress, nor addressed him in any other fashion than as an equal.

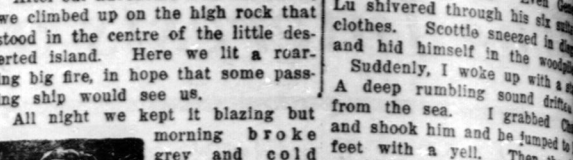

It was late when he had entered the lamp-lit serenity of his most unofficial looking office, but he lifted the wooden box containing the spectroscopy apparatus, which he looked better suited to liquor bottles than laboratory equipment, deftly transferred the hair to a glass slide, and for a long time sat motionless at his desk, one eye glued to the instrument.

Without looking up, he transcribed a series of numbers in decipherable notes on the sheet of paper under his hand. Barbara, returning from her party, saw the thread of light under the glass door. She hesitated a moment, her hand lifted to knock. Then, with a weary little shake of her head, she thought better of it and fitted noiselessly up the stairs.

The next morning, at an hour when most late-hour folk have yet to begin consideration of breakfast, Peter Piper was also experiencing headaches and head-shakings.

What came before? Captain Jimmy is flying to Japan with the Chinese General. They run out of gasoline and are forced to land on a deserted island in the Chinese Sea.

"After our adventure with the shark, we climbed up on the high rock that stood in the centre of the little deserted island. Here we lit a roaring fire, in hope that some passing ship would see us."

All night we kept it blazing but morning broke grey and cold without a sign of smoke or sail on the horizon. After daylight, we piled the wet wood up till a great stack of white smoke went to the top of the clouds but never a sign of life did we see on the still, glassy ocean.

The great smooth swell came in from the west, and we were dashed about by a dull boom against the rocks but apart from the sound of the waves, our island seemed to be the most silent, deserted spot in the world. Sometimes we'd find ourselves whispering—why I don't know—for we could have shouted all day at the top of our voices and no one would have heard us.

Day after day we kept the smoke pillar rising into the air, and Jimmy said: "I've killed a huge vulture on the summit rock. It's a dress that belongs to the regular steamer channels."

When we weren't gathering wood for the fire, we were hunting eggs in the sea. Jimmy said: "I've found a few fish—but they were very small and few like sin cushions. Being left on a desert island isn't half as much fun as we were taught to be."

It's a singular fact, that it is easy enough to clearly see and to acknowledge what is good and better, but when one attempts to make them his own, and to grasp them, somehow they slip away as it were between one's fingers.

"Well we'll see but you are so hard on your shoes," mother didn't seem to be as glad as I was.

But then we were getting away from the chickens. It is a good thing they don't wear shoes like the horses do, a pair of shoes would need to be changed every few days, because their little feet grow so fast.

You see we couldn't tell you about the chickens because the cats did such funny things all at once, and it took a long time to tell the story. But now we've found the kittens and they are all stowed away in a dark closet where they will grow fast and be just fine in a place where Mamma Lady Billy can see them when they want to and mind you they were so cute when Daddy liked to hold them once in a while. I didn't tell you there's a reason for putting them into a closet that is dark. I'll tell you about that another day.

Of course you know even though we haven't heard a thing about the chicks for so long Mamma Lady and Billy never once forgot to feed them and water them so it was astonishing to see how big and fine they had grown. They were beautiful with white feathers which made them warm and soft. But they were the very same and if you looked closer you could see enough to tell that one of them was Squatty for she was getting fatter all the time and was always looking for something more to eat. Bridget was there too. You would not know her because her neck was still long and thin and she was always looking cross and scolding somebody. I wonder what makes some chickens act like that. Lily's beautiful one, certainly was not. She was tame as any could be besides so pretty, so of course everybody liked her. I am quite sure Billy will be able to take her to the show.

But we haven't said anything about Jimmie Chick. I guess that is because I did not see her. It is a very nice chick. I guess that is because I did not see her. It is a very nice chick. I guess that is because I did not see her.

It's amazingly simple to make. Style No. 3178 may be had in sizes 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust. Size requires 3 1/2 yards 35-inch with 1/4 yard 35-inch contrasting.

So many attractive materials can be used for this model and size of neck with the particular needs of the wearer.

Cotton mesh, eyelet linen, printed lawn, lace, gingham, flannel, crepe silk, gingham and novelty piques will fit immensely.

Blame not the savage in the lonely forest for his ignorance of letters; but the man who has had every opportunity of attaining scholarship, and still remains in ignorance, rightly deserves the concentrated bitterness of human contempt. But beware of setting up precedents and inaugurating analogies, and instituting seats of judgment, because God will gather them all together one day, and His great white throne will be the more terrible for the precedents we ourselves have perpetrated.

After the persecution, the church in Jerusalem enjoyed peace. It was a period of quiet and steady growth. The "scattering abroad" of the believers resulted in the growth, in various centers, of the new faith. The need of superintendence was apparent. At the time when Peter was on one of these far journeys, he was stationed in Caesarea, a Roman military officer named Cornelius. Dissatisfied with the pagan religion, he had been attracted to the purer worship of the Jews. He acknowledged Jesus Christ as Lord. He was a devout man, and was well known to the Jews of Caesarea.

August 23. Lesson VIII.—A Gospel Text.—There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all, rich unto all that call unto him.—Romans 10: 12.

ANALYSIS. I. A GENTILE'S PRAYER ANSWERED, Acts 10: 1-8. II. A JEW'S OUTLOOK BROADENED, Acts 10: 9-23. III. A GENTILE PENTECOST, Acts 10: 23-48. IV. THE GOSPEL FOR ALL MEN, Acts 11: 1-18.

INTRODUCTION.—For a time the church had to deal only with Samaritans, proselytes, or a "stranger" in the occasional position of the Hellenist. It now took the great step of welcoming into the church the purely Gentile world. Not until the Jerusalem Council of A.D. 48 did the church embrace the Gentile world on an equal basis. It was the baptism of Cornelius and his ratification which opened the door to the Gentile world. The downward pointed skirt seemed narrow to the hips and it was decidedly length-giving.

After the persecution, the church in Jerusalem enjoyed peace. It was a period of quiet and steady growth. Phone Messages To Be Recorded

New Device Enables Business Executive to Have Full Resume of Phone Transactions

A device for recording telephone conversations, local, long distance, and transomatic, has been perfected in Germany. It is H. Koblhaas, the International Telephone and Telegraph Company's manager of public relations announces.

The New York Times quotes him as follows: "We believe there is a large field for this sort of device."

"Suppose a representative of a large banking-house has to make some rapid negotiations on an important matter with a bank in, let us say, Buenos Aires. The deal is completed after a long and detailed conversation. He then has to explain it to his associates. Instead of resorting to hasty and, perhaps, intelligible notes, he turns on the recorder and the entire conversation is repeated; or, perhaps, a stenographer makes a transcript of it for further study."

"It should constitute almost the equivalent of a signed agreement, and it is a personal document, such a record would be unimpeachable evidence in court if there should ever be a dispute. Of course, the device will have various other applications."

The device occupies a space about equal to that of a radio-receiver. It is based upon the telephone, invented over thirty years ago by Valdemar Poulsen, a Danish engineer. It can record a conversation of fifteen minutes. The Times goes on to say:

"The operation is based upon the principle that a steel wire can be made to retain degrees of magnetism varying through its length. The modern three-element vacuum tube, and it is understood that the recording device was perfected by Dr. Curt Sillit of Berlin."

"The fluctuating currents in the telephone circuit are amplified in the device and passed through the coils of an electromagnet. The steel wire is drawn across the poles of the latter by an electric motor. The fluctuations, corresponding with the voice currents, are recorded in the steel in minute and invisible variations of magnetism."

"When the conversation is ended the wire again is drawn through a solenoid, the magnetism acting upon the latter's coils so as to demagnetize it. Many a time, this, in turn, is amplified, and the result is the reproduction of the conversation."

"According to Mr. Koblhaas, the record may be kept 'virtually indefinitely,' but it is thought that in most cases a permanent record would be needed. To permit repeated use of the same piece of wire, the device incorporates a means for demagnetizing the wire by subjecting it to alternating current, after which it can be used over again. The instrument is attachable to any modern telephone."

Love. Untrained love can make disastrous mistakes, as an ignorance in any other sphere. You are prone to believe that true love is a sort of guarantee against error; that whatever we do in love for others is sure to work out for their good. It is a dangerous notion, from which some have had ruin or tragic awakenings. Many a mother who has been lovingly indulgent to her boy has lived to realize that those indulgences, born of her devoted and unselfish love, have helped to pave his way to ruin. Love must know, as well as feel. If we really love, we should be willing to study how to direct that love helpfully, instead of letting it take its own way haphazardly. What is best for those whom we love, rather than what we would like to do for them, is the question against thoughtless, ignorant love. "And this I pray," wrote Paul to those whom he loved, "that your love may abound yet more and more."

Events. Considering the unforeseen events of this world, we should be taught that the human condition should inspire men with absolute despair.—Fledding.

He—Pardon me, I didn't catch your last name. She—"I haven't caught it myself yet."
