"SALADA" JAPAN TEA

THE REMARKABLE ROMANCE OF AN INDUSTRIAL DICTATOR

Velvet and Steel

By PEARL BELLAIRS

SYNOPSIS
 Joan Dunby of humble origin, is introduced as a social equal of Miss Georgina La Fontaine, rather than as her secretary. She meets Fiers Hansen, millionaire, who forces his attention on her. Lord Edwards proposes to Joan. Joan leaves Miss La Fontaine to become mistress of the Salada estate. Fiers Hansen takes Joan and her family for a cruise about the world.

They went out on the terrace, from which they could see the harbour and the lights of the town; the moonlight shone on the white walls of the close-built houses of the town but a bank of cloud showed on the horizon of the sea in a line of dark.

Joan wandered away from them afraid of talking any more to Captain Annett, though she was ashamed of owing to the will of Hansen. Hansen came to her side.

He seemed quite at ease again explaining to her, casually, the meaning of the great door, studded with brass nails, which they could see in the house below.

"When you see a door like that you know that a rich man lives in the house. The rest of it may look like a broken-down prison—the door always indicates the status of the owner. The more elaborate the door, the wealthier the owner must be. They never seem to open those doors, either. I often wonder if one goes behind one of them, whether one would ever come out."

"How horrible!" said Joan, with a laugh and a shudder. "You are of a frightful age of captivity!" he said, mockingly.

Glancing round she saw a man with a start of surprise, that the others had left them; the terrace was empty.

"Where is Maude—and Captain Annett?" she asked anxiously.

"He has taken her back to the yacht. He had to go—he can't leave the Corsair for the men to manage with the wind getting up like this. Your sister was anxious to get back to the ship before the harbour gets any choppy, and so she went with him."

"But how—how will we get back?" Joan enquired faintly.

"Annett is sending the launch back with one of the hands."

Then as the matter of the launch engine came from the harbour, she said: "There they go, now!" he said.

"Gleaming faintly in the moonlight they saw the launch shoot out from the quay with the wake streaming silvery behind it."

"I'M HARMLESS!" Joan would have felt inclined to laugh at the consummate ease with which he had got rid of Maude and Captain Annett in the two or three minutes she had spent in looking over the end of the terrace, had it not been for her nervousness at being left alone with him.

He's Been Married 5 Times—She's Had 4 Husbands

Mr. and Mrs. William Wilding, of Spring Gardens, Preston, Eng., have—between them—a total of nine marriages.

He is 79, has had five wives. They live on $5 a week— their old-age pensions. Neither has been divorced.

Mr. Wilding said to a Sunday Express representative: "I first married when I was 21."

"That was Marjory. She died four years later."

"Then came Margaret, followed by Elizabeth and Mary, and now I have Caroline."

"When my fourth wife was living, a friend asked me: 'Which wife has been the best?'"

"I replied, 'The first was a good one, the second was a good one, and the third was a good one. This is my fourth and she is the best because she is still here.'"

"If they asked me that now I would answer in the same way."

Mrs. Wilding said she had had four husbands and had husbands, but she never had to leave one of them.

She added: "Once, when I was young, I was married to a man who said I would be married four or five times. I laughed, but she wasn't far wrong."

Between them Mr. and Mrs. Wilding have had 16 children.

Here's Hope For Aspiring Authors

WINDSOR, Ont.—"Anne of Green Gables," the story that depicted the life of Prince Edward Island at the turn of the century, has been translated into more than two dozen languages, and turned down five times before it was finally accepted by the publishers, Mrs. L. M. Montgomery's daughter, the author, said in a lecture here.

"Don't be discouraged if your stories aren't accepted," the noted Canadian author told her audience a large part of it young girls, assembled under the auspices of the Board of Education of the Home and School Association. "Anne of Green Gables was rejected five times," she continued.

"I met the manuscript agent in the attic. A couple of years later, while housecleaning, I found it and set it down and read it."

"I found it interesting, so I thought there must be something to it, so I sent it to the Press Company, of Boston. They accepted it only because a girl on their staff of readers came from Prince Edward Island, and she buzzed them into it."

Lucy Maud Montgomery, to use her pen name, suggested that all young people should form the habit of noting in books any experiences and stories they hear from older persons. Such notations, perhaps in later years, would form real material for books if in their possession of them develop a desire to write."

EVERY DAY LIVING

A WEEKLY TONIC
 by Dr. M. M. Lippin

HOW MUCH SLEEP?

A correspondent is afflicted with that terrible affliction of insomnia, she is a victim of nerves, she tells me, and only gets on an average about four hours sleep nightly. For a time she took something to produce sleep each night, but now the drug seems to have lost its effect. She is wondering whether she can get some drug that will be permanently effective, or if she should just try to carry on with what little sleep she can get without the use of drugs.

Well, I question very much if the amount of sleep one gets is just as important as we have sometimes been led to believe it is. I am certainly not in favor of the use of drugs or sleeping powders unless these have definitely been prescribed for the individual by the doctor. And here, I must remind my readers again that my field is psychology and not medicine. I cannot undertake to give medical advice, nor am I qualified as to do. I can only deal with physical disorder when it is evident that such a physical disorder is the outcome of mental disorganization. Of course mind and body are closely interrelated, and a surprising how many physical disorders are due to the lack of straight, positive, and constructive thinking. There are really very few people who have been trained to think properly, and it is this fact that gives rise for the need of the psychologist and what service he can render.

Now, then, to come back to this matter of sleep. There are some folks who can get along nicely on much less sleep than others. Of course, there is nothing, perhaps, that is more troublesome and annoying than to be awake for hours in the night with the mind racing, and the body restless. This is a condition which is not to be taken lightly. It is a condition which is not to be taken lightly. It is a condition which is not to be taken lightly.
