The SNAPSHOT GUILD

NEW ANGLES

It's the unusual that attracts attention

SOME people have the notion that the only pictures worth taking are those of unusual things. They take a camera along when they travel but seldom use it at home, unless something special is happening. But, believe it or not, some of your greatest picture possibilities are around and near your home. "But," you may say, "I have already made good snaps of the house, the family, the pets, the garden, and the new car. What else is there to shoot?"

It's a safe wager that there are dozens of other picture possibilities, and all of them as interesting as the ones now in your album.

The secret of finding them is simply a matter of keeping your eyes open. Get the habit of looking at things—everything—as though you had never seen it before. It's quite amazing the way this habit will sharpen your interest—now dulled by sheer familiarity—in even the most commonplace things.

Not all of us are interested in photography as an art—and if you don't believe it is an art, visit one of the salons or study some of the pictures in the advertising appearing in the better magazines. Is there any reason why we should not strive for artistic snapshots? Back of every fine, prize-winning picture is some one who has kept his eyes open for the unusual.

Don't be afraid of doing things in unusual ways. It's really a spring tonic to take pictures of old things and scenes from a different viewpoint. "Candid" photography and taking pictures at unusual angles were discussed in a recent Snapshot Guild, but perhaps some of you missed it. The point made in that article was not to have people in stiff, unnatural poses when taking snapshots. Snap them when they are doing something, or at least apparently doing something. Instead of having them stand as stiff and straight as a totem pole. Study your various subjects for unusual angles from which you may snap your pictures for unusual effects.

At the present time, take it for granted that present-day cameras, films, and modern photo-flood and photo-flash lamps give you unlimited scope for unusual, fascinating snapshots. Today almost any picture is possible—and at any time.

You are progressing in your use of a camera when you reach that stage when your friends say, "Well, look at that picture! I've seen that spot every day for the last ten years and never dreamed it had the makings of a picture like that." Such praise will surely thrill you. Maybe you have heard those words already! If you have—congratulations!
