"Even if a conventional gearshift lever is so shaped that the knees of the passenger do not interfere with its operation, it is still in the way of the passenger's feet on a long drive. It is also in the way if the driver wishes to leave the car through the right hand door in-stead of stepping from the lest into mud or snow or into the danger of traffic. The new 'Six-Passenger Sedan' coined to describe a car with room for three to ride safely and comfortably in the front seat should, most motorists will agree, be applied only to a car without the conventional gearshift lever."
