CHAPTER XI.

The MAN IN THE CAR

Then when Joan was lunching at the restaurant with Lydia Vaughan again, she was looking at the morning paper and her eye was caught by a paragraph in the social gossip column in which Hannen's name appeared. "I understand," it read, "that the yacht Corsair owned by Mr. Piers Hannen, is being hurriedly prepared for a trip to the Mediterranean. Mr. Hannen, wh chas not been seen about London very much since his return from his last cruise in the sunny South, will soon be away again on say on the subject.
