Sattling desperately to avert war.

Yet the improved outlook remains only a ray among dark clouds. It ally has gone so far that she finds it difficult to modify her position. True even a short war would tax Mussolini's country's finances almost beyond endurance and no one thinks that a war in mountainous Ethiopia would be short. But in Rome the opinion is freely expressed that Italy would not be satisfied without military control of Ethiopia.

As diplomats continue to spar it becomes apparent that if Mussolin insists on persuing his apparent intentions opposition on all sides will increase.
