This dirt comes from the body of the cow, the dust in the air, or the hands and clothing of a careless milker. It has been estimated that Chicago gets twenty-five tons of dirt each year in its milk supply. Aside from the fact that we would not willingly consume this dirt it is harmful because it may contain bacteria which in the intestine of the infant causes putrefaction and what is commonly known as summer complaint, one of the main causes of infant mortality.

A great deal of this dirt can be eliminated when small-mouthed palis are used during milking, and more is removed by the dairyman by straining or centrifuging. This last is a process that is carried out in what is known as a centrifugal machine, and consists of whirling the milk at great speed, and thereby separating the dirt. This removes the free dirt and makes the milk more acceptable in that it relieves our minds, but it does not remove the bacteria of infectious discounting of infectious discourse.
