Light Waves in Iron

May Explain Strength

Washington.—The strength of iron, a group of scientists was told, may be caused by a peculiar kind of light wave within the dark, dense metal.

Dr. Francis Bitter, of the Westinghouse Company, described his discovery of these light waves before the covery of these light waves before the covery of these light waves before the side, calling thickly to his followers. They leaped up, grabbed at their weather the adobe walls. He peered timorously the adobe walls. He peered timorously the door shut and his fingers went swiftly to his own belt.
