

ASK NO QUESTIONS!

By BELDON DUFF

SYNOPSIS.
Annette West, young and impetuous, leaves her home in a remote district on the north shore of Lake Huron, and enters the service of a doctor in a small town. She is a girl of unusual beauty and intelligence, and her arrival in the town creates a great stir. She is soon attracted to a young man named Dr. Crisp, who is a kind and gentle soul. They become friends, and Dr. Crisp begins to care for her. Annette, however, is not content with being a patient. She wants to know more about Dr. Crisp, and she begins to ask questions. Dr. Crisp, who is a man of secrets, tries to avoid her questions, but Annette is persistent. She eventually discovers that Dr. Crisp is a man of great courage and a true hero. She realizes that she has fallen in love with him, and she decides to tell him. Dr. Crisp, who has been waiting for her to do so, tells her that he has loved her all along. They are married, and they live happily ever after.

Cranston snatched his hand away just in time. His face turned gray. "A vicious beast," he said, trembling. "Lucky he is in no need of doctoring. I wouldn't touch him—no, not even if he were too sick to move."
Miss West looked thoughtful. "He's been that way ever since last night. I can't quite make it out. Do you suppose he realizes what's happened? Animals are very sensitive to tragedy. Some hint of it seems to come to them. I mean, a presence, if you get me. See, it's gripped him now. Oh, look! Look!"
The big stallion had raised his head and was staring toward the trapdoor in the harness room, a curiously expectant expression on his half-white, half-black face. Even his ears were cocked, listening.

"I believe," whispered the girl, "that he knows who killed Otto and is trying to tell me. Perhaps the murderer's somewhere around." In her excitement she caught the veterinary by the sleeve. "Perhaps he's here now—right this very minute!"
Receiving no reply, she turned impatiently, and saw that the horse doctor was eying her stallion with a look of strange malice.

"As you say, man the murderer is indeed here," Annette cried, pointing to the box stall. "There he stands. Your pet. It was he who killed Otto, wasn't it?"
Miss West said she sincerely hoped so, and since this unquestionably terminated the interview as far as she was concerned, Dr. Crisp had no choice but to leave. He turned to go, but Annette called him back. "Wait! Wait! Wait!" she cried. "Wait! Wait! Wait!"

CHAPTER VII.
The deputy left by Seth Toby to guard the house had his dinner and was established in the most comfortable chair in the living room when Miss West entered. He seemed surprised to entertain her with confidence concerning the incompetence of certain Hales Crossing officials but she fled to the sanctuary of the back kitchen.

At ten o'clock Abby fixed a pot of coffee and some sandwiches for her protector. When the repast had been served before him the two women announced that they were about to retire to the floor above.

"Make yourself at home," urged Miss West with doubtful hospitality. "All I hope is that you won't be needed in your official capacity." The man had a gun; not the automatic of fiction, but a real gun, his trigger cocked, ready for emergency.

"You go to sleep, miss! I promise to be a scared of nothing," he said. "Better wait for the second sound," he advised. "This is no ordinary man hunt we're embarked upon. Your bullet might go clean through the No, you mustn't do that," he gasped.

"Did you say CRISP? Just try one!"

Sporting Tales

Curcio must have been a disconcerting opponent at tennis. Before the War he occasionally went down to the Stoke Poges Club, then being run by Mr. N. Lane ("Pa") Jackson, the veteran sporting writer and founder of the Corinthian Football Club. He played a little golf, Mr. Jackson tells us, in "Sporting Days and Sporting Ways."

Just as the combined weight of sleeplessness and darkness had grown almost too heavy to be borne, the tired body relaxed. Eyes closed, drooping, quivered again, settled into places. For an instant, then, twenty, sleep gave temporary relief to the exhausted brain. But before the sleep had become deep enough to do any good a violent contortion of the muscles almost lifted her from the bed, and there she was awake once more—awake and trembling.

CHAPTER VIII.
Lord Balfour, then Mr. Arthur Balfour, came to play golf at Le Touquet, the French resort which was practically made by Mr. Jackson. Mr. Balfour was a great golfer, and he had a hand touched her face. She flung the bedclothes from her and sat up, and when she dozed off, something came out—something that was buried long ago.

Twelve days gliding out from under all the trees to lay stealthy fingers on the nose and gardens. From somewhere, not far off, a whisper came, "What he knows who killed Otto and is trying to tell me. Perhaps the murderer's somewhere around."

CHAPTER IX.
On the knoll near the graveyard, willows stood Dracula, head up, tail down, as if he were looking for something. He was looking for a sign something more than ordinary had occurred to arouse his temper. Her answer was not long in coming. From the side door of the red barn emerged a man—a tall, broad-shouldered fellow, as physically potent as the horse he was driving in.

amusing story about Sir William Rose, the first Colonel of the London Rifle Brigade, of which he was a member.

CHAPTER XI.
On his first morning he asked in French for some hot water for shaving purposes, but naturally could not make the valet understand. After he had been brought a variety of articles such as toothbrushes, soap, and so forth, they served him with some tea. By this time he had arrived at a state of such despair that he willingly accepted it; for, after all, it was a novelty.

CHAPTER XII.
A ton of moss for Lady Haig's pop factory was collected by the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides of Perthshire. The moss is used for wreaths.

CHAPTER XIII.
Mr. Jackson's memory goes back an extraordinarily long way. Readers, young and old, will find in his cheerful and crowded pages, the real sportsman, kindly and generous to his fellows, and a truly loyal friend.

CHAPTER XIV.
Those authors who appear sometimes to forget they are writers, and remember they are men, will be our favorites. Balfour.

CHAPTER XV.
The pioneers of English lawn tennis was Bagnall Wild, who invented the system of "draws" by which he was able to win every tournament. In most of the early tournament prospectuses it used to be announced that the "Bagnall Wild System of Draws" would be adopted.

CHAPTER XVI.
Before professionalism at football became legalized, Mr. Jackson tells us, there were all kinds of devices for making it worth while for amateurs to play. A player who had just taken part in his first game for a club he had been persuaded to join.

Q. K.—I have a field of muck land on which I want to grow wheat. This land is not well drained. What kind of grass mixture should I sow it to? Answer.—You are fortunate in choosing one of the best crops to grow on this type of soil, but it is a little un-fortunate that the soil is not drained, since no crop can do its best if water is standing in the soil. Water which can be drained off always is injurious to growing crops. Roots will not penetrate through layers of water, nor can bacterial action so on in soil as in waterlogged soil. If you have a muck soil, you will find it difficult to grow wheat. If you have a muck soil, you will find it difficult to grow wheat.
