This was particularly true where tobacco plants were being produced in permanent greenhouses or A-shaped beds, in which case th glass was left on during the winter. Very satisfactory resul's have also been obtained from steaming ordinary flat beds in the fall. In this case it is preferable to cover the outside beds sufficiently to keep out weed seeds and disease organisms

(gern b) which may be blown into the eds during the winter. Tests conducted over a period years at the Dominion Experimental Station at Harrow show that as many plan's were produced over a given area and were ready for transplanting just as early from the fall-steamed beds as from beds steamed in the

The primary object in steaming tobacco beds is to destroy weed seeds, disease organisms and insects. Satisfactory results from steaming require from 20 to 30 minutes with a boiler pressure of 100 pounds. Hot COW BECOMES BANKER steam is much more effective.
