

ASK NO QUESTIONS!

By BELDON DUFF

STONORER
Anissa West, young, impetuous and good-looking, leaves her home, a decorated farmhouse in a remote district in Ontario, for a job in Toronto.

CHAPTER II
To go back a few hours, the morning of that nerve-ridden Saturday had dawned over Bride's House clear and blue. A soft breeze blew from the east, and the air was so fresh and so pure.

Since her arrival at the farm the new tenant had employed every waking moment in trying to get settled. Her eight boxes of household goods, which she had shipped by rail, had been unpacked, and she was endeavoring to get her belongings in their proper places. The house was so full of things that she had to resort to the aid of a trunk for some of her more valuable articles.

Dressed in the same gray flannel suit she had worn to the station, she stood in the doorway, looking out over the fields. The air was so fresh and so pure, and she felt as if she had found a new world.

At the moment there was a perceptible chill in the atmosphere. The sun had set, and the stars were twinkling in the dark. Anissa West was alone in the house, and she felt a little lonely.

This was no suggestion born of an idle moment. As on all New England farms, the out-buildings of the Barn were connected with the main house proper by a covered passage-way. They consisted of a white barn, a cow shed, a pig pen, and a chicken run.

"I'm going to ride you, my beauties!" she cried to the pink velvet horse through the bars at the handle of her riding crop. "I'm going to ride you this summer even if I break your neck and mine doing it!"

"That being the case, if you asked my opinion, Miss West, I should say you had better get that horse out of the barn. It's a good as broken already. Dracula was one bad horse."

At the edge of this pool Miss West paused, and with her riding crop she pointed to the red barn, and she asked: "What's the name of that barn?"

At the edge of this pool Miss West paused, and with her riding crop she pointed to the red barn, and she asked: "What's the name of that barn?"

Every drugist has Aspirin, and if you ask for it by that name you are sure to get relief. Aspirin is a trademark registered in Canada.

The Tramp Parson

To be a successful tramp you must have all your wits about you. So, at least, says the Rev. Frank L. Jennings, "The Tramp Parson," who describes the life of a tramp, usually a tactician, in a new book.

At a recent meeting, there was one who had been called a "tramp" by a woman who was a staunch teetotaler. "Do you ever drink intoxicants?" she asked him.

The average tramp feels uncomfortable unless there is a good layer of dirt on top of his skin. To keep the dirt from coming off, he has a comb and a brush, and he keeps them very clean.

With rather more curiosity than fear, Anissa West took up the string of beads and peered at the red ink, and she wondered what it was for.

"Ask No Questions." (To be continued.)

Halloween
Bolt and bar the front door. Like all the world before, Moon-rise to-night.

Halloween
Chestnuts to roast, A gift for the ghost. Who will have their fate told. This night is known, Whose hand is full of gold, Who goes alone.

Halloween
A lover for me, And a fortune for you. Stars shiver blue and green, Moon's white and white.

Halloween
Apples a-ho, Eives at the key-hole. And imps on the bob. "Twelve" asks the deep bell, To the hollow night. "Twelve" whisper steeple tops, Far out of sight.

Halloween
Fires burn high, Who shall say certainly, Who shall say truthfully, What solemn company, Pass through the sky? —By Molly Capes.

Opportunity
The man who makes the most of every opportunity he gets will never want for anything. He will be busy and happy. The man who never sees an opportunity going round by itself, but only as a chance, will be poor and unhappy.

Mistakes
Leave your mistakes behind you, But don't forget how you made them. General Booth.

"My friends all ask me what I used"
I had a lovely delicately-colored silk scarf from Paris which was my pride. It was so soft and so light, and it was so beautiful. I used it every day, and it was my favorite.

The Gorges and Canyons of Canada

The tallest peaks of the Canadian Rockies, crowned by Mount Robson at fourteen thousand feet, seem to beckon across the prairies as the train leaves the last little outpost city of Edmonton, "North of 53." The air is so clear that one hundred miles distant seems but just over the horizon.

At Jasper, mountain towns on a little elevated plateau in the heart of Canadian Rockies, the far-come transcontinental train makes a long tarry after a slow and tortuous climb of thousands of feet. Here is the very edge of the cliff-enclosed lakes taken on the month of October all of the great outdoors does its richest work. The deep blue and the vivid contrasts of green and crimson and gold assail each other in a veritable riot of color.

We press on and by and by come to the wonderful canyons and gorge of the Thompson and Fraser rivers, the majestic scenic regions of the west. The water is so clear and so pure, and the scenery is so beautiful. It is a place where the mind is soothed and the heart is soothed.

It is an arrangement designed to be a study in the art of nature. It is a study in the art of nature, and it is a study in the art of nature. It is a study in the art of nature, and it is a study in the art of nature.

Canada Gets Her Share

If you have any doubt that the country is a success, a disappointment of its results, don't let any one tell you that it is not. It is a success, and it is a disappointment of its results, don't let any one tell you that it is not.

In the view of those who negotiated the agreement, the outstanding benefit to Canada is the return to a state-controlled competition, especially in the wool and fur trade, the first of which is now in the hands of the British.

Whether the western grain interests like it or not, the six cents a bushel preference over foreign wool is a small matter. It is a small matter, but it is a small matter, and it is a small matter.

The British Government has been in the habit of raising the wool tariff to a level that is now in the hands of the British. It is a small matter, but it is a small matter, and it is a small matter.
