Oxygen Bricks

Berlin.—"Canned oxygen" is the name given by the Vossische Zeitung to an invention which, it is claimed, may save hundreds of lives in peace, and hundreds of thousands in war.

This beneficent discovery consists of the chemical fixation of oxygen in such a way that the gas may be carried about in the form of briquettes and yet be immediately available for breathing purposes.

The briquettes are contained in tims similar to those used for canned asparagus. They will cost from 55 to 60 pfennigs (about 10 cents).

The canned oxygen may be stored for years and moved about to any extent without risk of explosion or fire. After an initial warning—set in action by a blow—the briquettes (it is explained) give off for hours, without pressure, an even exhalation of oxygen.

The gas is so highly concentrated.
