LOST OPPORTUNITIES

There is much time spent-nay, rather, wasted-thinking and worry ing about lost opportunities, tides that have been missed, dreams that have never shown any inclination to come true, schemes which have friz zled out. A much better plan is te work away cheerfully at the job 14 hand, do it well, try to put heard and enthusiasm into it, to do it in an original way, to look at its most cheerful side, to find out the romance which lies hidden in most things is we will only look for it.

Then, some day, in trying to like the thing we have to do, we may and that we have been led into doing the thing we like best of all. -

Samarium is what is known as a rare earth. Next to it in the table, occupying the sixty-first place, is "illinium." Possibly the rare earths are rare because they have been shooting off alpha particles, and thus reducing themselves to something else. It may be that we shall have to revive a view that was current at the opening of the century—that all the elements are radioactive and that they are the end products of activity that began cons ago when exploding atoms, like those of uranium, were commoner than they
