A Road Menace

The report on automobile accidents during the first four months of 1933, as issued by the statisticians for a just issued little publication, contains leading insurance companies, contains rather significant little disclosures. While the total number of deaths from the road for the same period in 1932, was 1,000, however, for the first four months of 1933, the number of deaths was 1,100. This is a 10 per cent increase. The number of defective cars involved in fatal accidents increased by nearly 40 per cent. This, of course, is a consequence of the depression. Cars that are old and worn, and which have defective brakes, lights, tires or steering mechanism are being driven on the roads. The number of cars that are being driven is increasing. The number of cars that are being driven is increasing. The number of cars that are being driven is increasing.

THE EMPIRE
