London, Eng.-The phrase "Paying the piper while others call the tune" is a colloquialism dating back to the beginnings of the Pied Piper of Hamelin in the thirteenth century. It means to bear the expense or loss of something from which others derive the benefit either voluntarily or v compulsion. Congreve used the phrase in a modified form in his play "Love for Love" in 1695. It was used by Flatman in "Heraclitus Rideus" in 1681 in its present

And, anyway—"

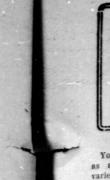

"Oh, I know!" said Tack, in a changed voice. He laughed. "Bon't you worry, Pete. I'm not going to you worry, Pete. I'm not much good—damned if I'm yellow, though. I'll stick it out."

They were quiet for a while.
"You've got the right idea, Pete," and Tack. "Take it or leave it alone—that's you. Used to be that way myself, once. Long time ago, though.—was ferce, all at once.
