

A Quality Which Is Incomparable

GREEN TEA

"Fresh from the Gardens"

Seeing New York

By ED. W. WARING.

I cannot leave Chinatown and the Bowery without telling of two exciting experiences I had while wandering around these places. Thinking some pictures would help me remember my sojourn in this interesting city I started on one day to take some snaps of Chinatown and the Bowery. How ever my camera, which I had brought with me, was short lived because the first two attempts nearly cost me my camera and probably my well being.

Arriving in Chinatown I picked out the headquarters of one of the Tong and was getting ready to take a snap of it when out dashed a shabby dressed Chinaman gesticulating wildly. Grabbing my camera, he asked me, "who you take?" and when I answered meekly, "just for curiosity," he told me, none too politely, to "go away" and I didn't have to walk far before I espied a typical Bowery saloon. Standing right on the corner, the saloon was equipped with swinging doors, brass rails to rest the weary feet on and all the other essentials which go to make up the real thing. However, it seemed as if this was my unlucky day, and no sooner had I set myself to take this piece of artistic scenery when out dashed the barman. When I saw barman I mean it. He was one of those things you hear about but seldom see. He was small and portly and had a well seasoned hand-bar mustache which looked as though it could stand a couple of whippings, his nose was a little red and reminded one of a well seasoned tomato and with his checker vest and white apron he had a perfect picture for a beer advertisement.

Grabbing my arm which held the camera, he asked, in words which only a Chinaman could use, "who you take a picture, and far away from home, I took his advice and moved away without much coaxing.

Union Square, which I have all probably heard about, is located not far from the Bowery and is New York what Alton Gardens and Hyde Park is to London. It is the meeting place for the soap-box orators and here one can get a lot of advice, and far away from home, I took his advice and moved away without much coaxing.

Indian Art Being Revived in B.C.

Children Model for Life; Forests Supply Material For Dyers

Indian arts are being revived in the native schools of the Okanagan Valley, B.C. Children take time out from study of the three R's to scour the forests for flowers and roots which are used to instruct them in the correct use of their materials.

Mosses, flowers, roots and bark are made into dyes and paints. Old recipes for the making of medicines from herbs and roots are being revived and children strive to improve and perfect their creations.

Spinning, weaving, dyeing, pottery, clay modelling, carving and design are attempted by the children in the class-rooms. To the accompaniment of folk music, the children are taught to sing Indian songs and listen to records of musical selection.

Ponies, dogs, cats and calves serve as life models for the drawing class. The mascot, a pet duck, is often coaxed to pose. Clays used for modelling are found on the reserve. After they are in a big city, and far away from home, I took his advice and moved away without much coaxing.

Herbs that are collected include ginseng which is prepared for the treatment of rheumatism. For respiratory ailments, a decoction of the flowers seeds was found beneficial. Butterweed, as an emetic, was voted preferred, while the pitch of the cedar was used as a salve in the treatment of wounds.

One method used in the treatment of snake bite was the application of the powdered rattle of the rattlesnake, rubbed into the wound. Colors of the Okanagan tribe—red, black and yellow—are employed in the painting class. Paint is obtained from red and yellow ochre, mixed with fish oil, and black from charred pine wood embers. Ochre is secured from Tullameen near Princeton, Tullameen being the Indian word for paint. In the olden days it was exported in large quantities to different parts of the American continent. The Blackfeet used it when on the warpath.

Girls Need Training More Than Boys

Milwaukee—There is a greater need for girl scouting than there is for boy scouting, in the expressed opinion of the only male delegate to the Girl Scout convention.

Twenty years in Girl Scout work and 15 years in Girl Scout activities leads James E. Brooks, retired consulting engineer of Glen Ridge and Montclair, N.J., to believe he is qualified to judge.

"The Boy Scouts are a great organization," he said, "but even without it boys are inclined to develop into good and active citizens. Girls are different. They are just beginning to enter fields heretofore strictly left to men, and they haven't the natural inclinations or abilities which thousands of years of experience has given to the other sex."

Every soul has a landscape that changes with the wind that sweeps after it, with the clouds that return after its rain.—George MacDonald.

"It democracy cannot do better in the future in assuring competent leaders, some other method will be devised to produce them."—Harry Elmer Barnes.

MANHATTAN NIGHT

CHAPTER XXX.

The station Peter had felt at first, as he saw Charles Mitchell heading home his points, and the collapse of his victims, left him before his cabin had carried him half-way across town to Park Avenue and Carol's apartment. He was feeling the reaction, probably, for one thing; now that Martha was safe and the tension that had been in his nerves taut was snapping he could think of other aspects of the whole dreadful, shocking business. While she had been in imminent, hourly danger of arrest, of a public disgrace that, no matter what the final outcome, must have left her crushed and broken, nothing else had mattered.

Danger of some sort, there still was. In spite of Charlie the truth about the part Ross had played, and Meyer Zahn's instance, might come legal everybody was selling it, drug stores, cigar stores, grocery stores and any other store with a roof over its head. The Federal Government soon nipped this by putting on a $500 license fee, and no new "go away" restaurants which have opened here and there in front of their establishments. However, the large fee didn't deter the burlesque shows, and one can enjoy a sandwich and glass of beer while watching the antics of the supposed actors.

In concluding this series next week I will tell you of some experiences in Harlem and endeavor to describe the "Great White Way" for you.

He looked up from the street and saw that Carol's windows were still lighted, but the public had closed the street. Steve Wentworth let him in.

"Where's Carol?" he said, dubiously.

"Down at your place with Martha," said Steve. "How about the locked them both up," said Steve. "That as a fool stunt, Peter—"

His lawyer's mind couldn't get away from what both he and Steve had said. He was obviously and blatantly ignoring the presumptuous, outrageous offense of the law and all its powers.

"Oh, forget it, Steve," said Peter, wearily. "It's all right now. Steve was leading the way into the living room. He turned, amazed, at Peter's words, and then he said, "You're a clever man, sir—I'm glad it's over as it has, thank you to the good good Mitchell did on the end of the case he handled."

"Good evening, Mr. Wayne," he said. "You're a clever man, sir—I'm glad it's over as it has, thank you to the good good Mitchell did on the end of the case he handled."

"What do you do now, Arthur?" said Steve.

"Nothing. Sit tight. I'll keep in touch with the D.A., of course. Conolly'll have to grin and set as if he were pleased—and they damn't let anything that'll hurt Mrs. Thayer come out if they can help it. She's a better stay where she is till Conolly's got a long time to get his feet out of his warrant. We might as well go on down."

Three tired men, who looked more like the bearers of tidings of disaster than the couriers of good fortune, went downstairs, then, and waited front across the street a tall, elderly man came, limping a little. Bouton hailed him, surprised.

"Ah, Bouton! I'm looking for some people called Wentworth—my daughter and her family, I fancy. Is this the house?"

Peter looked curiously at Martha's father. He was a tall man; though, at the moment, he was a little disheveled, he had the fastidious bearing of one who thought much of his appearance. Bouton performed introductions.

"Ah, Mr. Wayne—yes! It was you who telephoned me. I'm greatly indebted to you. It was Steve Wentworth, who had come in arrest if I see the lady?"

"Of course," said Bouton.

Peter used his key. Manuev, half asleep in the kitchen, its door wide open, started his feet as he smiled happily, as he saw Peter, Carol, looking tired, came out of Peter's room. She looked one at Peter. Then she knew.

"Then—it's all right!" she said. "Martha!" she called, gently. "Martha!"

ROYALTY GOLD SYNDICATE

London Register Offices Closed

Henrietta Street and Princess Row, Scenes of Romantic Marriages Locked up Tight

Two of London's famous register offices—Henrietta Street and Princess Row—the scenes of some of the most romantic marriages in recent years, closed their doors a week or so ago.

Royalty, the cream of society, American millionaires, and members of the foreign nobility, made a special point of going to one of these register offices to be married. And, conversely, few Covent Garden porters would marry, elsewhere than at Henrietta Street.

Probably the last fashionable society wedding to take place in Henrietta Street, just off of Lord Curzon Avenue, Egerton to the King, to Mrs. Violet Nevill.

Now there is only one register office for the City of Westminster, and that will be at Caxton Hall. This is a full military kit complete with medals and order, in ordinary working clothes, and in fancy dress."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

"The curious thing about French bridegrooms is that they insist on being married in evening dress, even if the ceremony takes place during the morning."

Woman's World

By Mair M. Morgan

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

How to make a good dinner for a party

Sunday School Lesson

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

Lesson VIII—November 19, 1911

COMMENTS

By AUSTIN MORAN

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

Comments on current events

WRINGER ROLLS

Re-Rubbers Also New Rolls
for any make of electric washer or hand wringer; highest quality, lowest price. Money-back guarantee.
Coffield Electrical Appliance Co.
387 Yonge St. Toronto

VIKING GOLD SYNDICATE

Owning 1,000 acres one mile west of Toronto.
330 Bay St. Toronto

WHY ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Keep off Aspirin
water. Note that BE-FORE it has time to disintegrate.
Does it dissolve in class a dose in your stomach?
MADE IN CANADA

MUTT AND JEFF

By BUD FISHER

Quick Relief Now From Neuralgia

Real ASPIRIN Starts Taking Hold in Few Minutes