Tulips may be planted from the end September to November, said the Dominon Horticulturist. October, ne oubt, is the best time. The soil need not be rich. Any ordinary garden soil is suitable, but it should be well dus and drained. A position in full sur suits them best, but they will bloom in half shade for a season or two. The bulbs may be left in the ground until they become crowded and the flower are small, or they may be lifted each year. The time to lift them is when the foliage is turning brown, or, if the bulbs should be planted close togeth er in a shallow trench in the back garden until the foliage dies. The bulbs should be stored in bags and kept dry all summer. In the fall, the large sized ones may be replanted in the border, and the smaller ones planted in a row in the vegetable gar den for a year or two until the grow to blooming size.
