Canadian Root Growth Canadian field root crops, both yield and quality, raised from Canaported seed. However, previous to the Great War there existed a conception in the Dominion that field root seed grown in Canada was not capable producing as good crops as seed of the same varieties imported from Eur-ope. Until that time the amount of field root seed raised in Canada was negligible, the bulk of the seed used beir imported from Europe, supplemented by small quantities from the United States. During the war imported seed was not available, and it was a case of growing seed in Canada or cutting down the acreage of crops. The De-partment of Agriculture led the way, and since then ample proof has been given, particularly through the extensive tests by the Experimental Farms and Stations, of the continued stabil of Canadian-grown seed.
