Canada, The Empire and The World at Large

Just Missions.
A Toronto school teacher tells us that he had his class write out the Lord's Prayer and found that many of them didn't know what they were repeating every morning. One of the commonest mistakes was in the second clause, which several wrote as "Honor be Thy Name." Another Toronto school teacher had been telling a fairy story beginning with the usual "Once upon a time." When she asked for a synopsis, she was surprised to find one girl beginning her story with "One pound of time, there was..."—Fergus News-Record.

No Teacher's Pats.
Children of a Winnipeg school held a "pet show," but none of the teachers' variety were exhibited.—Winnipeg Free Press.

Beauty and Business.
Thanks to the admirable concern of womanhood for their personal beauty, Canada has an industry which has flourished even when every other was going to ruin. The manufacture of beauty preparations in Canada had a production of $2,732,640 in 1925. In 1923 it reached $4,771,000, which represents an expansion of 70 per cent. approximately, right in the period of general depression. This industry has a very utilitarian side to it. It employs many hands, and distributes a million dollars a year in salaries.—La Patrie, Montreal.

From the Same Place.
"Seeing a pretty girl as good as a tonic," says an advertiser. And sometimes they are made up at the same drugstore.—Regina Leader-Post.

"Canada Place."
We are interested to see the suggestion in a London evening newspaper that the Westminster City Council should give to the island site on which Canada House and the first Sun Life of Canada building stands the name of "Canada Place."

Years ago "Canada" suggested that the short length of Cockspur Street might be advantageously changed to "Canada Street," as it contains the offices of the Canadian National Railways and the Imperial Life of Canada and on the north side the great block of the Sun Life of Canada adjoining Canada House.

Possibly our contemporary's suggestion might be more acceptable to the Westminster authorities, because it would not do away with the old street name, but would merely give a new special direction to the few buildings on the island which consists only of the White Star Line, Sun Life of Canada, Canada House, and the Royal College of Physicians. We can warmly recommend the suggestion to the Westminster City Council.—"Canada" (London).

Living in the Present.
Halifax Harbor has had an excellent year, with tonnage considerably larger than 1932 and 1931. The Eastern port now is among the keepest bidders for ocean traffic, and has built up upon the great days of its building and sailing of wooden ships.—Toronto Globe.

Chop Licenses for Old Cars.
An innovation by the Provincial Government in issuing cheap licenses to aged and more or less decrepit trucks and cars may not prove an unqualified blessing. Owners of old cars presumably are not affluent. Giving them a ten dollar license will win their approval. But careful inspection of aged vehicles should precede the granting of a permit to operate them on the public highway. Unless Government officials are satisfied they are roadworthy, that they are not potential nuisances to other traffic, the experiment is apt to result unhappily.—Edmonton Journal.

Protect Art Treasures.
The fire at Ottawa in which a large number of valuable classical paintings were destroyed in a private house, calls attention to the necessity of protection from fire for art treasures of every description. The National Gallery at Ottawa is no exception to this rule and needs attention. There will be sympathy for Mr. John Gleason.—Hamilton Herald.

Changing Times.
A recent item of news from Great Britain drew attention to the fact that an old family had been forced by the pressure of a changing world to give up an estate on which for 23 generations it had made its home. It was the Drewey family, one of the last families to remain in possession of an estate granted in the time of William the Conqueror.

Here is a family which has seen Britain develop from a feudal kingdom to an industrial democracy, has seen ruling dynasties come and go, and it had itself remained unchanged. But now the end has come. Economic conditions have forced the family to put the estate up for sale. It has been bought, according to the news cable, by a real estate firm for "speculative purposes."

Changing times and business depression have cut wide swaths in the world what is familiarly known as Britain's aristocracy. The breaking of the
