A ROMANCE
By Kennaway James

Matthews Jill Merriwell became, on the death of her father, owner of a considerable estate. She was a girl of about twenty, and her father had left her a large sum of money. CHAPTER IV.—(Cont.)
As Mark walked down the street on his way to Stone Town it occurred to him that Freda had not given him the letter that she had mentioned. He wondered for a moment if she had really meant to do so, from which it will be seen that he was not without knowledge of women was not profound.

Freda's last words were an invitation to call again next time he was in Morley, if by then he had read the books she had lent him. The thought entered his mind that he would call on her not only to see the books but also to see the girl who had given him the letter. He was a man of about twenty, and his father had left him a large sum of money.

He had by no means forgotten Jill, but he endeavored to put her out of his mind. She had, purely because of his own fault, caused a disturbing element in his life. But he was mistaken in thinking that he was to have the evening alone, for no sooner had he begun that exquisite combination of first page and first book than there was a knock on the door.

Mark opened to see the grinning face of Larry Luby. "Hi, Mark," he said, "would you mind a-going round to Miss Merriwell's?"
"What is the message?" Mark asked.

"Well, as a matter of fact it was, replied Mark. Jill had made a guess and was surprised to find herself right. "Freda is in an interesting right," she said. "She wanted to see how Mark would react. Mark made no attempt to hide his enthusiasm. "She's great," he replied, heartily. "And has been good enough to lend me some books which I have carefully read. Pretty, too," he added, as he looked into his pipe casually a log in the fire.

Jill's eyes narrowed almost imperceptibly. "Yes, she's pretty," she replied laconically. "If it wasn't for what you said to me in the dairy, I should think you were in danger of falling in love with her."
"This did Jill open the subject which was really the only one about which she had wished to speak to Mark. She took him by surprise, for she had said earlier that the subject was to be a simple one. "I'm afraid that, to me, falling in love means getting right out of my depth. I should not do it twice," she added, gazing into the fire as he spoke.

Great ability without discretion comes almost invariably to a tragic end. It is a well known psychological fact that the conduct of children is formed by the influences that surround them; and that their notions of good and evil are the result of the moral atmosphere they breathe.

KITCHEN TRIALS.
Time saved by factor in the kitchen on any other place, and if one takes one's eyes from the vegetables on the stove, they take it upon themselves to burn.

TAPIOCA MERINGUE.
Here is a way of cooking tapioca, so that what is "good for the children" will be liked, too.

PLENTY OF FAT.
The success of frying articles dipped in egg and cracker almost always depends upon having plenty of fat in the pan, and that very hot in hotels, the fat is so deep that there is no need to turn the article to brown on all sides.

"Short Anesthetic" Displayed in London
"Short anesthetic," lasting for fifteen to twenty minutes, may be produced by an anesthetic exhibition in London.

One-Pot Stew
Berlin.—The winter relief committee compiling a "national cook book," has asked German housewives to send in their best recipes for a one-pot stew compulsory in Germany one Sunday a month.

HOW TO BATH.
Most housewives have an aversion to any article of dress that requires lengthy bathing as it is so drying. Try to remember to bathe from the top of the head down to the feet in the motion. It is far less tiring.
