Jill of the Fields

A ROMANCE
By Kennaway James

SYNOPSIS
Mechanics Jill Merridew becomes one of the great women of the world...

"However, did you get to know about it," he asked.

"For Miss Merridew," replied the landlady, "haven't you seen the paper this morning? Why, there's ever such a long piece in it about you and Miss Jill. Wait a minute, I'll go and fetch it for you."

A moment later she returned with Mr. Hissop's great organ of public opinion. Harbour swung softly as he looked at the paper.

"For a moment," he said, "I was engaged to Jill. He had said it, of course, in a newspaper man in order. These chaps needed to be kept in their place. But who on earth expected it to go straight into the paper?"

"What do you mean?" asked Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.

"I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill. "I don't know," said Barbours. "I don't know," said Jill.
