As aliver prices rise. China becomes a more important exporter of the white metal; and Chinese silver shipments already have been of sufficient bulk to keep the London price of bullion from rising in normal response to United States bidding. What the final effects on China and other Oriental countries are to be is far from clear; but it is obvious that a new phase of adjustment in world affairs is only commencing as a result of the new silver situation.

In addition to the Eastern compilications, there will be effects in the Occident that cannor fully be estimated at this time. It is evident at reday, however, that from some effects of the silver-buying program there has followed a weakening of the U.S. dollar in Europe, This has ted in turn to the export of gold, in effect, then, the United States will be buying at least some of the silver acquired out side its own borders, by the payment of gold from its huge store.
