"Now there was a certain rich man." The word lich in the Latin version is dives, and many assign the name Dives to this rich man.

"And he was clothed in purple and fine linen." Pliny says that the particular linen here referred to was exchanged for its weight in gold. "Faring sumptuously every day." It has been suggested that sumptuously might aptly be changed to flamboyantly. No dark vice is here referred to; yet selfishness and extravagance are certainly to be understood.
