Make somebody happy today
Each morning that motto repeat,
And life, that was gloomy and gray,
At once becomes pleasant and sweet.
No odds what direction you go,
Whatever the pathway you wend,
Marry of woe: There's somebody weary of woe;
There's somebody sick for a friend. There's somebody needing a guide Some pilgrim whose wandered astray:
Oh, don't let your help be denied
Make somebody happy today!
There's somebody tired of the strife. wearisome struggle for Bourne down by the burden of life, And envying those who are dead. And envying those who was a little encouragement now,
May drive his dark visions away.
And smooth out a seam from his brow
Make somebody happy today.
There's somebody sick over there,
Where sunlight is shut from the row There's somebody deep in despair Beholding no light in the gloom; There's somebody needing your aid,

Your solace, wherever you stray.
Then let not your help be delayed
Make somebody happy today.
Make somebody happy today.

Meanwhile, the farm, as ever, coptinued to furnish the wherewithal for the feast, and at the same time, as centuries rolled by and towns became swamped in their own activities, it was the farm that kept alives kindly, ancient rites of the feast. Many centuries laker, Charles Dickens restored to the townsfolk of England something of the joy and the spirit of Christmas which still flourished among activities, it was the farm that kept alives the spirit of Christmas which still flourished among activative or munities. Even today many of the ancient agricultural Christmas celebrations, as distinct from the towns, survive, some of the under limited conditions. There is Plough Monday, for example, which is still observed in several countries, including the British Islas. In olden times in Europe, Plough Monday marked the end of the harding in Europe, Plough Monday marked the end of the harding in Europe, Plough Monday in January after the Twelfth Day. NOTICE

D URING the past two years it has been my extraordinary privilege to occupy the Editor's chair of your local newspaper. Such a task, to many, might be considered devoid of responsibility, but to me there is a definite obligation ahead of whoever accepts the task of publishing The Jarvis Record. In January of 1937 the "Record" will have completed Fifty-nine years of continuous serrvice to the district in which it serves.
During that time it would be ridiculous to suggest that the "Record" has not played a great part in promoting and cementing community sympathies and goodwill. It has supported and influenced many progressive undertakings that have become a reality, down through the years. The objects and purposes of the community paper, are to me, just as essential to the welfare of our great Dominion, as they were fifty-nine years ago.

It has been the purpose of the "Record" especially during the past two years to publish a paper that would merit the approval of the most discriminating reader.
Many kind expressions have already lent great encouragement to that effort. As the years pass by, it is my hope that the influence and reputation of the "Record," based upon it's service for the past fifty-nine years, will ever go forward, taking the lead in the progressive building of a greater community, inhabited with a peace loving people, anxious to support the survival of British fair play, freedom and justice.

I would also like to take this opportunity of extending my appreciation to our many subscribers for their loval support, also our correspondents, advertisers and all others who have had any part in making the "Record"
a more interesting publication.

With the horrors of the depression becoming relegated in the minds of men, Christmas in this year 1936 invites a greater expression of happiness and we can look forward to 1937 with a renewed spirit. There is also encouragement in the fact that the solving of our economic and social problems with which this and other countries have been faced has brought something of the philosophy of Him for whom Christmas was named.

May you all share in full measure the cup of happiness at this Yuletide season.
