A Little Topsy Turvy

It was one September morning. The sun was shining brightly. In October last July. The snow was in the sky. The flowers were singing gaily. The birds were in full bloom. When I took the broom and went upstairs To sweep the downstairs room.

The time was Tuesday morning. On Wednesday late that night I saw ten thousand miles away A horse just out of sight. The door projected backwards. The front door was in the back. It stood alone between two others. And it was white with frost.

It was midnight on the ocean. Not a street car was in sight. The sun was shining brightly. And it rained all day that night. It was a summer day in winter. The rain was snowing fast. A barefoot boy with shoes on. Stood sitting on the grass.

It was a dark and stormy night. And the sun was shining bright. The villain's lips were tightly sealed. While he yelled with all his might. "Come kill me if you dare. But kindly spare my life." While the hero cut his head off. And shot him with his knife.

A young maiden tripped alone. She was old and bent with years. Her eyes were bright and happy. But her face was filled with tears. She recognized the dying man. And cried aloud "Who is he?" He lifted his dead body and exclaimed "Great Scott? It's Lizzie."

It was evening and the setting sun. Was rising in the west. The little fishes in the trees. Were huddled in their nest. The rain was pouring up in drops. The moon was shining bright. And everything that you could see. Was hidden out of sight. —Milverton Sun
