prison? She believed that he would—and goodness knows, her father deserved it. And yet would he, could any man, carry such a thing as this marriage through to its end? But she knew the power of disappointed hope; what would drive Lydia Vaughn to the point of drinking from a bottle of searing, burning acid would certainly drive Piers Hannen to this.

She told Madame Celie that she would be leaving them, and that that day would be her last there.
