CHAPTER I
Egypt Carse noted a tense, worried atmosphere about the inner office of Apex Surety as he came through the door. Milligan, the florid western manager, looked distinctly unhappy. The tall, lean, impassive man who stood by Milligan's desk

Egypt Carse grinned. "I usually come along. What's up? I got your wire on the trsin, Milligan."

Milligan polished his pince-nez rapidly. He bit out his words nervously.

Egypt rolled an eye at Carewe.
"You could have done worse."
Carewe grinned. "Couldn't have done better, you mean. Now that I'm on the job, you chaps don't need to worry."

"Then we'll leave it up to you,"
Egypt assented.
Carewe gave him a wry look. "You win," he confessed. "I don't want this alone. I don't like the looks of it. If I was Mr. Milligan, I would save myself worry by refusing to insure."

"Not a bad idea," Egypt agreed. "But he can't."
"I should say not!" Milligan exploded. "Impossible! For forty years Apex Surety has never refused a risk. We reserve the right to make our own premiums, depending on the risk, but we never refuse to insure. No! We'll insure! And it's up to us to see that nothing happens to the jewels!"

"And if anything does?" Carewe

No! We'll insure! And it's up to us to see that nothing happens to the jewels!"

"And if anything does?" Carewe queried.

Milligan slammed his clenched fist on the desk with such force that the papers jumped. "Then it's up to us to get them back!"

Egypt Carse walked to the office window and stared out. Far below lay the hustling streets of San Francisco's business district. Over the rooftops of smaller buildings he could see clear to the waterfront.

Ships from all countries of the world were docking, unloading, loading, departing. And there the City of Shanghai was docking, with the Mandarin Lee Wong and millions of dollars' worth of unset jewels aboard. Down there must be someone who knew about those jewels; someone who was playing for big stakes with all the cunning of years of experience. And Egypt did not doubt that it was someone who deserved respect. No one else would have the nerve to go after them.

He turned around.

Peace

A dreaming baby moon above the bay Awakes and smiles in greeting at the friends
Close-gathered round the beach-fire, then descends
To mother night, whose breath of new-mown hay
Bears cow-bells faintly tinkling on their way.

Soft lapping of the waves at play attends
The ebb from shore and rocks and gulls and lends
Enchantment in its tranquil evening lay.

Far from this quiet hour of rural bliss
The loved ones of the long ago have gone.

Their ling'ring spirits veil the calm night round
In benediction borne on Nature's kiss And shared with old friends by the firelight wan,
This summer eve, where gentle peace is found.

Battle of Basket Is Taken to Court

basket, first bassinet of the Dionn quintuplets, figured in a court action here recently when Mrs. Alex Legron quintuplet midwife, laid an assaul charge against Harvey Simrod, Syd ney Brown and Mildred Adams, employees of a souvenir booth near the Dafoe hospital.

Last week Mrs. Legros, owner of the basket, took it to her home across the road for safe-keeping, claiming that souvenir hunters were mutilating it. She said the three accused later invaded her home and treated her roughly in their efforts to restore the basket to its place of honor in the souvenir booth.

Magistrate J. H. McCurry thought the whole matter much ado about nothing and dismissed the charges.
