whole career as a big league player depended on this first game. He knew that Pop expected him to stop up the leaks in the infield. He would fill up the gap. He had to make good. He thought of Frances. He would make good for her. He knew about Pop's articath toward hall players of man the gap. He had to make good. He thought of Frances. He would make good for her. He knew about Pop's antipathy toward ball players as possible husbands for his daughter. Was Pop's reason the same one his family had advanced? His people thought ball players were useless members of society. Was that what Pop really thought about his men?

In the press box Terry Burke, the young baseball expert on the Star, was the first man to arrive. He eyed the eager crowds with satisfaction. Terry had always been a loyal rooter for the Blues and had done all he could through his paper to convince the fans that Pop Clark had al last assembled a team which could, with the proper breaks, become a pennant winner. Terry had been with the team all through their training period and he knew good baseball material. Terry was sure the jinx had been removed, but he was alone in his opinions. The others all said the Blues were false alarms.

CANADIAN RECOVERY

This business revival in Canada has been contemporary with a general revival in the Bhitish Commonwealth of Nations, which began some years ago with the remarkable improvement in the economic condition of the Mother Country, and which has been the tended to all parts of the Empire.

This is a revival which has been a more drawn out or diluted by boiling water. Until our fish thus cooked to brown crispness on the outside is tasted, one knows nothing of their gastronomic possibilities, all the love of Stefansson and the fanciest chefs of the contrary.
