Sunday School Lesson

LESSON VII.

GOD GIVES LAW TO A NATION
(Exodus 19: 1—20; 21.

Printed Text—Exodus 20: 1—17.

Golden Text—Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matt. 22: 37, 39.

The Lesson in its Setting

Place—Mount Sinai.

Time—B.C. 1498.

"And God spake all these words, saying, I am Jehovah thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage."—Two fundamental reasons for Israel's obedience to the law about to be given are here announced; the one who gives the law is none other than Jehovah and God, Jehovah meaning "the one who is," i.e., the eternal one; this redeemed the Israelites out of the house of bondage, and consequently had a claim upon them for their gratitude and obedience.

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me."—This commandment is a direct prohibition of every form of worship which does not have for its object the Jehovah of the Old Testament, who is the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and strikes at the very root of all polytheism, and of every ancient and modern religion and cult which exhalts to a place of worship either a mythological god or goddess, or an actual human being. There cannot be two gods.

"Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, nor any likeness of any thing that is in Heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them; for I Jehovah, thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, upon the third and upon the fourth generation of them that hate me.

"And showing lovingkindness unto thousands of them that love me and keep my commandments."— As the First Commandment forbade any other being to be worshipped as God, the Second Commandment forbids the making of any images of God or of other creatures to worship and serve.

"Thou shalt not take the name of Jehovah thy God in vain; for Jehovah will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."—The word "vain" means "empty", "without reality," and, by taking the name of God in vain, not only is all profanity which uses his name here condemned, but all acts and words of men who pretend to be solemnly worshipping God, while their hearts are far from him.

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work. But the seventh day is a Sabbath unto Jehovah thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates.

"For in six days Jehovah made Heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore Jehovah blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." — The word "Sabbath" means, literally, cessation, and, consequently, rest. While the word itself does not appear in the Bible until Ex. 16: 23—29, the idea of the Sabbath is revealed in the story of creation (see Gen. 2: 1—3). For other important references, see Ex. 31: 13—16; Lev. 19: 3, 30; Deut. 5: 12—15; Isa. 58: 13; Jer. 17: 21—27.

"Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which Jehovah thy God giveth thee." "The meaning of the word "honor" is—"to attach weight to; to put in the place of superiority; to hold in high opinion; to reverence, in the best sense of that word." "To the child who is not yet of age to think, to plan, to will, honoring of parents consists in subjection, obedience implicitly and gladly rendered. This, like every law of God, is for the child a gracious and yet imperative requirement.

"Thou shalt not kill."— This and the next three commandments have to do with life, purity, property, and reputation. The command not to take another life naturally stands at the beginning of a series of laws dealing with human relationships.

"Thou shalt not commit adultery."—Strictly speaking, adultery is violation of the marriage vow on the part of either husband or wife, while the accurate term for sexual relationships outside of the marriage state is fornication. Both of them and all sins of every form involved in these certainly come within the scope of the Seventh Commandment. Impurity is probably the most terrible curse in our modern Western civilization, and it is getting darker, and deeper, and more prevalent. Our vicious movies have a great deal to do with the careless, indifferent, almost smart attitude which our present generation is taking toward sexual sins. No man can treasure evil thoughts and let them remain in his heart. They are like the plant which starts in the recesses of your porch, which presently beings to creep out into the light. No man can think foul thoughts, no man can meditate on things that are unworthy without paying the price for it in his manhood. Keep pure associations. There are evil-minded friends who love to spew out upon their suggestions. Against them we can only erect the barrier of aggressive purity.

"Thou shalt not steal." — Underhand dealing was the besetting sin of the Hebrew. It is exemplified in the early days in the character of the national ancestor, Jacob. It is the constant cry in the social teachings of the prophets — Hosea, Amos, Isaiah, and Micah.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neigbbor."—To bear false witness is to make a public statement before one or more persons concerning another in such a way as to deliberately utter a falsehood about that person or persons.

"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's."—The improper desire is the root of all evil. It can seldom be reached by human legislation. But it is open to the Searcher of hearts. The intent is that which, in the last resort, determines the moral character of the act. This last 'word,' is, therefore, the interpreting clause of the whole Decalogue (Rom. 7:7). Covetousness here includes envy, malice, and every other selfish or disinterestedness, but of all forms of unselfish benevolence. This commandment is, therefore, virtually the law of love, and in this positive sense gives that loftier aspect to the Decalogue, the traces of which have been already noticed.

The Grand Canyon of the Colorado River is the longest and deepest canyon in the world. In some places it is more than a mile deep.

TIENTSIN, WHERE FIGHTING IS THE FIERCEST

A street scene in Tientsin, the base of Japan's operations in Northern China, which was bombed by Japanese planes and set afire after Chinese snipers attack developed into street fighting.

Health Depends On Cleanliness

School or College Girl Needs Plenty of Sleep, Food and Exercise

Exercise, fresh air, sunshine, a sensible diet and sufficient sleep are the best beauty preparations for the college girl. Good health is the foundation of truly radiant beauty, and it's a mistake indeed for the coed to try to subsist in chocolate sodas and fad diets, or to fall into irregular sleeping habits.

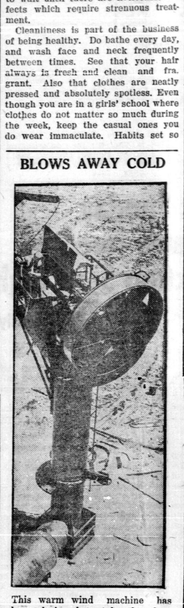
It's great fun to sit up in the dormitory and talk for hours and hours after study periods are finished, of course—and conversation is wonderful —but one who makes a habit of sleeping all too few hours a night will find that her beauty, not to mention her alertness, will suffer.

Even though you are not the active sportswoman type do go in for at least one active sport while you are at college. If routine exercises in the gymnasium bore you no end, take up golf, tennis, swimming, badminton or fencing and get your exercise that way.

Brisk walks in the sunshine will keep your figure as trim and supple as it is now. No college girl wants to be bothered with a flock of intricate beauty routines, but walking isn't a bother, and it is more sensible to pay a mite of attention to your figure now while you are young and lovely than to wait until there are noticeable defects which require strenuous treatment.

Cleanliness is part of the business of being healthy. Do bathe every day, and wash face and neck frequently between times. See that your hair always is fresh and clean and fragrant. Also that clothes are neatly pressed and absolutely spotless. Even though you are in a girls' school where clothes do not matter so much during the week, keep the casual ones you do wear immaculate. Habits set so early in life stick. So why cultivate slovenly ones? When you get out into the world and whether you choose a career of business, teaching or marriage, neatness will count. Learn to be trimly groomed now, then you won't have to be bothered trying to change your habits later on.

BLOWS AWAY COLD



This warm wind machine has been designed to take the place of smudge pots when cold snaps threaten orange orchards. It is on exhibit in Los Angeles by G. W. Grable and W. E. Saxe, its developers. Hot air is supplied by oil burner at base and is sucked up flue and distributed over a ten-acre area through fan driven by automobile motor.

Happy Lady Goes Home

Lady Peel, Beatrice Lillie, of stage fame, is just one broad smile as she poses on the deck of the liner Queen Mary before sailing for a vacation in her home in England.

TRAILER-RIDING PONY SHINES UP FOR SHOW

Texas Tommy, a lone cowhand who travels the night club circuit in an automobile and a trailer with his performing pony, "Dolly," gives her a pedicure before they hit the night spots in New York City. The trailer is for "Dolly's" comfort.

Clocks of the Naval Observatory, which furnish time for the United States east of the Rockies, are kept in an underground vault and are wound by electricity. The vault is never opened except in case of emergency.

QUEEN'S NIECES ACT AS BRIDESMAIDS

The Queen's twin nieces, Mary and Patricia Bowes-Lyon, daughters of the Hon. Michael and Mrs. Bowes-Lyon, were bridesmaids at the wedding of Mr. Vernon Harington and Miss Mary Egerton at Holy Trinity Church, Brompton, London. Note the strong resemblance between Mary Bowes-Lyon (left) and her cousin Princess Elizabeth

MINISTER TO JAPAN IN MONTREAL

Hon. Randolph Bruce, Canadian Minister to Japan and Mrs. Bruce, arrived in Montreal for a short stay. Photo shows them on arrival at Windsor Station. While in Montreal they will occupy the Van Horne residence.

Movie Star Dust

By VIRGINIA

Everything goes in cycles in motion pictures, and just now the Russian cycle threatens to engulf the screen. No less than a dozen of the most fascinating women are currently holding forth midst of Russian magnificence.

There is Marlene Dietrich, Robert Donat, in "Knight Without Armor," for instance, Miss Dietrich and Robert Donat make a thrilling pair. Another of the Russian is "The Emperor's Candlesticks," which Luise Rainer and William Powell appear as rival spies in Russia and Poland. Last, but by no means least, particularly to Shirley Temple fans, is "Two Who Dared," with Anna Sten, who has been conspicuously absent from our screens, since her last appearance here is best friends

At last George Raft is out of seclusion and he is so nice about it that who are his friends that. The day the picture ed he celebrated with a haircut and smeared Later

Ever since a court West to break down she really was married to one Frank Wallace, in seclusion. Couldn't people stare at her in for wrinkles, while they their fingers—eighteen six make forty-four.

In those odd moments are not discussing Mae Hollywoodians are no beautiful newcomer, Ire under contract to Sam is an enchanting young 19 years old. Born far from the Arctic to school in Berlin, Carlo Ballet Russe she was visiting in Mexico because of her two years with his troupe her Russian accent.

Rudy Vallee spends evenings nowadays at Kelly put up his hand. in New York who Jackie Osterman is back after a long luck. Vallee is a and one of his favorites Jack Benny. Vallee admires the drastic Jack Benny treated a ville audience came out on one side merrily saying "Hollywood" face a bunch of Russians who glowered at tinuing right on across exited from the stage, by folks," and walked of the theatre never Martha Raye made life and smashed records making personal at the Paramount The York recently. The could not get enough surged down to the her act was over, that her, begged her to song, and then just when her voice broke out.

Frankie Masters, hand maestro says "I merce and he had hotels and leading Chicago and other is starred with Ruby "It Can Be Done" ODDS and ENDS—Gene Autry a 10-criticism and comney picture of his only reads every line he tries to correct his next picture, marveling at Cosmo sportsmanship in Young get most of the first comedy. "Tomorrow

---

'SALADA' TEA is delicious

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments

When the United League season opens, the gamblers are offering 200 to 1 that Pop Clark's New York Stars will not win the pennant. Terry Burke is the only sports writer to give them a chance. He bets $10 at Mirabella's restaurant in the theatrical district. In the Blues' dressing room Whitey Whitzer, the Philadelphia first baseman, is killed with a bullet through the head after smashing out a home run. Patrolman Burke and Larry Doyle, Whitey's rookie shortstop, for whom Whitey's pretty daughter Frances had a particular preference over Whitzer, are detailed at first by Detective Lieutenant Burke who discovers it was Jack Stream, notorious gunman, who picked a taxi with a bullet hole in the tire and injured four Boston players as the Blues are to open their series. Then Dirkin, Chicago star, is found dead on the diamond from poisoning by a phonograph needle fixed in the end of his bat. Pietro, Chicago boy, disappears. Clark Hotel in Newark but he is soon found in Boston. When the Blues go to Chicago, Scotter, the Rubes' manager, is found dead from a blow struck off by a mysterious powder puff with a jigsaw puzzle sent to him anonymously. Each time there is a beat on these sensational openings and masked gunmen turn up, question him and disappear. Burke knows too much. Raw-Hide, Chicago manager, ill when the team arrive for a series, is hanged in his hotel room adjoining his, and is gagged and bound, but not before his pass-key has been taken. Again there is no clue to the murderer.

There is something else I have to say in confidence, I said Detective Kelly in the chairman waited, but there was no discussion.

A few minutes of rapid-fire talk Kelly put up his hand. "Listen, gentlemen! I know about this case than you do. I know what has happened." From the beginning and took it just as it had occurred. I've kept coming up in his mind.

It seem that this Burke has been in at the killing of all the men except Rawlins," Bullal remarked. "Are you sure he is above suspicion?"

"Burke was in the hall when Rawlins' body was discovered," Huette, Rawlins' assistant, said.

"Burke softshoed it, then," the chairman cut in. "He had very little to say about it as an eye-witness."

"How would you feel if you were Burke? With the cops after you on one side and a bunch of crooks on the other?" Kelly asked. "That lad is on the level, I'm sure of it."

"So am I," Pop Clark said with a nod of understanding toward Kelly. "He has told you all he knows, I'm convinced of that. There is nothing to know."

"I think Burke is our one hope." Kelly's remark was greeted with surprise.

"Why?" Hallem asked.

"Because he's being hounded by the gang. That's obvious." Kelly then went on to tell them in strictest confidence of the attack on Terry in his rooms and also the attempt to kidnap him in St. Louis which he was clever enough to escape.

"I wouldn't want to be in his shoes." Treddle of Philadelphia, entered the general conversation for the first time.

"It's not too healthy," Kelly admitted, "but I still think he is our one hope. They are afraid of Burke. They are afraid of a leak in their own outfit. They can't understand how and why he should always be on the scene when one of these crimes is committed, any more than I could at first. I believe Burke, but they don't. The attempt to get him in St. Louis proves that they are still doubtful about him. They are probably watching him all the time and know every move he makes."

"Then you think we might get some sort of clue through Burke, that is, by having him watched, you mean?" Althome asked.

"I've had him covered for weeks now," Kelly said resentfully. "I know every move he makes. He is in the lobby now, or was when I came up."

"That is my fault," Pop Clark spoke up. "I asked him to come east with me and to hold himself in readiness. I had a feeling that we might be able to use him in some way."

"We could use him, all right, but it isn't fair," Kelly said.

"What do you mean?"

"We could use Burke to drag the gang out."

"As a bait, you mean?" Pop Clark asked.

"Something like that. We ought to get at them in that way."

"Have you any idea about these men? Who they are, how they operate, or anything like that?" Bullal asked.

"Sure, I have ideas, but you need more than that. I've thought for a long time that Tony Murallo was mixed up in it in some way and I still think so, but I haven't been able to get a thing on him or any of his gang. Tony has an airtight alibi for each of the crimes and so have his men."

"But if you feel that way," Basher said, "I should think you could do something about it. Couldn't you force a confession out of him or something like that?"

Kelly looked at Basher for a moment and there was a slightly contemptuous glint in his eyes before he spoke.

"I'm afraid you gentlemen are not aware of the problems faced by the police. Of course you know that we have courts of law. You have heard of crooked lawyers and fixing. You know that our politics are supposed to be slightly crooked. All of these things have to be considered by the police."

"Do you mean to sit there and tell us that the police can do nothing because of the crooked system of our government?" Althome asked coldly.

"Not at all, Mr. Basher asked me why we had done nothing after I told him I suspected Murallo. Suspecting a man is not enough. Not if he has a gang and money behind him. In the first place, he always has a good lawyer at his call and those lawyers know the law. Suppose we take him up on suspicion—we can't arrest him, just invite him round to the station house to ask him a few questions—what can we do?"

"Why do you suspect Murallo?" Pop asked.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Worry May Cause The Teeth to Decay

Dr. William I. L. McConigle told the American Dental Association the other day that when the human body is thrown out of balance by worry and fear, the teeth may decay, because the consequent upsetting of the thyroid gland prevents them from getting calcium needed to fight bacteria.

Speaking at the fortieth annual meeting of the American Gastro-Enterological Association, Dr. Kenneth T. Tillotson, a psychiatrist of Massachusetts General Hospital, declared that "you really can think yourself into stomach ulcers, for constant thought on the subject restricts the natural processes." Dr. Heinrich Neckeles, of Chicago, said that worry is causing peptic ulcers both among the well-to-do and the less fortunate. He added that this type of ulcer, which afflicts the duodenum and stomach, is found in high-strung persons, regardless of their monetary possessions. Among the mechanically employed, chauffeurs are especially susceptible, because they are under a heavy strain. Examination of the physical records of London busmen since their strike in May has disclosed that within certain ages they are more subject to diseases of the digestive tract than other workers. According to Dr. Tillotson, emotional factors may be the underlying cause of digestive troubles, headache and feelings of general illness, anxiety and discouragement.

The chronic worrier tends to induce the very ailments that he fears. The problem is how to stop him from worrying. Certainly shouting "Don't worry!" at him will not do the trick. He must help himself by submitting to mental discipline. He may not be able to achieve the detachment of an ancient Greek stoic or an Oriental mystic, but he can, if he really desires it, acquire something of a philosophic attitude toward life.

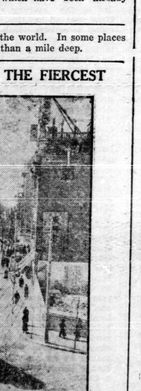
By deliberately reminding himself that most problems work themselves out with time, that most anticipated evils do not befall, he can avoid contributing to the breakdown of his physical resistance and can escape from the vicious circle.

Bright Accessories Worn With Black

NEW YORK—That black frock fashion which has stampeded into summer's high style scene lends itself beautifully to different accessory colors. If you're carrying out the red note, one shop has smart gloves in framboise (raspberry to us).

Another good color contrast note for black is gold, in huge blobs of costume jewelry, such as a giant fig leaf clipped at the front V of a neckline. And if you can't be drawn away from the white, the new chalk-white bead calla lilies, in the "white berry" line, with little yellow bead centres, and green glass leaves are charming.

The lilies come in clips, on bead bracelets, and necklaces. One ingenuous four-strand necklace of big beads has a calla lily at either end, instead of the usual clasp fastening. It's long enough so you can do all sorts of lovely new tricks with the clips, such as crossing the bead strands in front and clipping the calla lily ends at opposite sides of your frock's neckline.



BABY'S OWN SOAP
Best for You and Baby too

Issue No. 33—'37
C—2

Women Take To Skeet Shooting

Used to Take Along Knitting While Men Handled Guns

Skeet shooting, invented some years ago by W. H. Foster and Henry W. Davis, of Boston, is said to be rising in popularity among women, according to the New York Sun. A few years ago only the hardiest of their sex dared borrow a gun and shooting jacket from brother or husband for a few trial shots. Today finds the number of women in the United States who shoot regularly climbing toward two thousand.

With only three years of shooting experience to her credit, and on her first trip to the Great Eastern Championships, Mrs. H. E. Rogers, of Waltham, Mass., walked off with the women's title at this summers' Lordship, Conn., meet with a score of 85 x 100. She also holds the world's long run skeet record for women — 117 straight targets—won in January; and recently gained the women's skeet title of Massachusetts. Mrs. Rogers also does much partridge and woodcock shooting, and is well known in Gulf Stream fishing circles.

Miss Winifred Hanley, of Stamford, Conn., runner-up for the Lordship title, says it's a toss-up as to which she takes more seriously—skeet or golf. Mrs. S. L. Hutcheson, of Larchmont, N.Y., adopted skeet rather than take her knitting to shoots in which her husband participated. Liking it at first trial, she is now an alert, accurate shooter with a constantly improving score.

A mental handicap was added for woman shooters at Lordship by the presence of the prominent woman skeet shooter, Mrs. W. W. Walker, of Washington, D.C., who recently not only won the women's championship of Maryland and the District of Columbia, but also took the all-around title from both men and women contestants with the excellent scores of 49x50 and 98x100. She was also runner-up in the recent North-South Women's Skeet Championship. Mrs. Walker dispels any idea that the woman shooter must be a hefty, muscular Amazon. Feminine and soft spoken, she nevertheless takes to the shooting post a quiet confidence and steady accuracy that seldom fails to bring results. A bit of bad luck prevented her from placing at Lordship.

Women Advise On House Planning

Men Overlook Small Details Essential to Efficient Work

A new housing group has been formed by women in London, Eng., says the Christian Science Monitor in a story from there.

Not content with the strides made in working-class housing during the past few years, the women consider that too little attention is given to interior arrangements, for the reason that men—who have never themselves been housekeepers — do not always seem to understand the profound effect that interior arrangements can have on family life and leisure.

"Bricks and mortar," the women say, "do not make homes. It is the little things, the small contrivances thought out to make life easier, that count." And so, under the name of Women's Advisory Housing Council, they have set themselves to "advise" in regard to internal construction wherever advice is wanted.

One of the matters to which they are giving especial attention is the housing of elderly people. Local authorities are ready to expand generously in the direction of the very young. They build day nurseries and communal centres for them, and have especial regard for the housing of large working-class families. They are less alert to sympathize with the old. Yet, England is faced with a growing population of elderly people, since longevity is on the increase, and the birth rate is falling, and the latest available figures show that 7.9 per cent. of the population are over 65 years of age, with the number going up.

Old people, the new group maintains, should never be called upon to ascend steep or crooked stairs. They should never be expected to live without central heating. Baths, for them, should be on the "sunk" variety, with inside handles to aid the bather.

Electric plugs and switches should be placed high enough up the walls to eliminate over-much stooping. Cupboards should be low. "Labor-saving" devices should not be alarmingly complicated. Every bit of sunshine should be made available and, through the windows, the best and liveliest views should be obtained.

Already the new group is recognized by the Ministry of Health and the services of its members will be requisitioned as need arises, either by the Ministry itself, or by any other body of builders anxious for the best results in the construction of working-class homes.

Bracelet Watches Worn With Black

NEW YORK—Bracelet watches are worn with black, and the new ones are very handsome. Some have a wide band of gold, with a small watch face in the centre, and others have a narrow band of gold with a wide band of black velvet ribbon.

Home Hints

By LAURA KNIGHT

Blackberries in Two Roles

Blackberries are not on the market yet in some parts of Canada but they should be fairly plentiful in a very short time. Here are a couple of ideas on what to do with them which you can keep in mind until your local grocer has a good supply for sale.

Blackberries grow fairly evenly all over the Dominion and they have always been popular for jam making, but not used much for jellies. This is because housewives know they lack pectin, the substance which makes them jell, and so have naturally avoided trying to do anything about them in the jelly line. But that is an old fashioned excuse for not using these delicious berries in jellies because the modern cook uses bottled fruit pectin to take the place of natural pectin and so is never stuck with a fruit that she can't make into jelly.

Blackberry Jelly

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice.
8 cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar.
1 bottle fruit pectin.

To prepare juice, crush thoroughly or grind about three quarts of fully ripe berries. Place fruit in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice. Measure sugar and juice into large sauce pan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil, and boil hard ½ minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jelly at once. Makes about 12 eight-ounce glasses.

* * *

Here is a grand blackberry dessert which you can serve the same day you make your jelly. Just be sure to save enough berries for this and also be sure that they are the big juicy ripe ones. It is Blackberry Roly-Poly, the kind your grandmothers used to make —a flaky, but delicious spiral of biscuit dough filled with rich, wine-dark berries and juice. The ingredients given here will make enough roly-poly for eight people — that is, if they all polite and don't ask for a second helping. But even if there are only four in the family, there still won't be any left over. The heat way to settle the shortage problem is to serve this delicious dessert quite a few times during the blackberry season.

Blackberry Roly Poly

2 cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons butter or other shortening
¾ cup milk (about)
Melted butter
1½ cups fresh blackberries
6 tablespoons sugar.

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt and sift again. Cut in shortening. Add milk gradually until soft dough is formed. Turn out immediately on slightly floured board and roll ¼ inch, thick. Brush with melted butter, cover with blackberries, and sprinkle with sugar. Roll as for jelly roll. Moisten edge and press against roll. Place in greased loaf pan with edge of roll on underside, brush with melted butter, and bake in hot oven (400 degrees F.) 20 to 25 minutes. Serve hot with cream. Serves 8.

They Were Laughed At

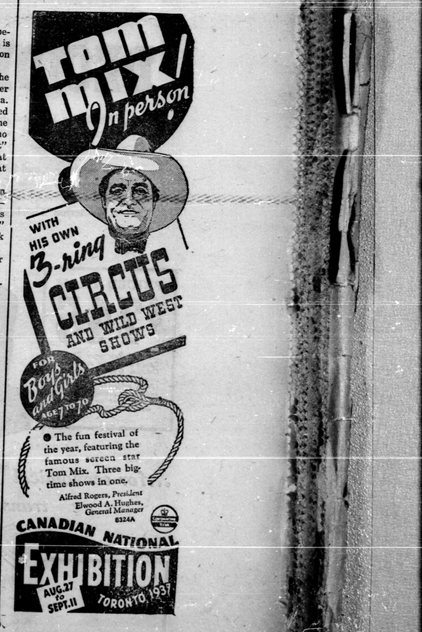
Mr. H. G. Wells says he is hopeful for the peace of the world. It is to be hoped that Mr. Wells is on sound ground in his belief.

It was Mr. Wells who wrote "The War in the Air" just a little after the end of the war in South Africa.

It was Mr. Wells who visualized aircraft dropping bombs in the Strand, in Trafalgar Square, who told us about "Bert" and "Albert" who found themselves in a great German aeronautical park—and what happened to them.

But it was Mr. Wells, like Norman Angell—now Sir Norman Angell — who was laughed at in those days prior to 1914. "The War in the Air" and "The Great Illusion" almost look like back numbers now.

How prophetic those two pre-war books were!

Careless Pedestrians


An educational campaign might well be undertaken to make the pedestrian more careful in crossing street and highway. As a rule, young pedestrians are much more careful where motor vehicles are concerned than are their elders. Because of the repeated admonitions of parents and teachers, the young have learned to stop and look. Education thus plays a part in promoting highway safety. It may not reach some careless adult pedestrians, but it should be emphasized and intensified among the young who will constitute all the pedestrians of tomorrow.