SCOTTISH HOTEL NAMES INTRIGUE CANADIANS

Ottawa November 10 — In Canada, the word "Hydro" usually refers to one of the country's most vital assets, hydro-electric power. Its a different story in Britain, where the people always think of a hotel when "Hydro" is mentioned. The term is short for "Hydropathic." English and Scottish Hydros are usually temperance hotels where water cures are the thing.

Canadians learned something about them during the visit of twenty-two Scottish hotel-keepers and their wives. The party, organized under the joint auspices of the Scottish Travel Association and the Hotels and Restaurant-rs' Association, of Great Britain, spent a day at Ottawa, seeing the Parliament Buildings and other aspects of the Capital and making a thorough inspection tour of The Chateau Laurier, where they were entertained to dinner by the Canadian National Railways hotel department.

Two hydros were represented in the Canadian National Railways hotel department.

Two hydros were represented in the group — one at Peebles and the other at Skelmorlie. Hotel names in the list that seemed particularly romantic to Canadian ears were the Ugadale Arms of Machrihanish, the Duke of Gordon Hotel of Kingussie, and the Bailie Nicol Jarvie of Aberfoyle. The last is named after a popular Walter Scott character, the magistrate in "RobRoy."

Installation of three ground radio stations for the Trans-Canada Airlines is proceeding at Winnipeg, Regime and Lethbruige, according to Philip G. Johnston, Vice President in charge of Operations. Equipped with ten-channel sets, 500-watt trans nitters, they will provide two-way of the magistrate in "RobRoy."

ing, when the car in which he was riding rolled over in the ditch twice. He was on his way to Delhi from Simcoe in company with three Belgians and it was believed the driver fell asleep, as the auto went in the ditch without warning. Jack suffered minor cuts and bruises on his face and legs and was covered with a cleaning fluid that was in bottles in the car, and believed to contain chloric acid. Some of the fluid got into his eyes and it was gravely feared at first that his sight would be impaired. He was removed to the Norfolk General Hospital by a passing motorist, where he received.
