A Weekly Review Of National Affairs

(By "Spectator")

Ottawa, December 20th — The dissension between the federal administration and the premier of Ontario with all possible implications of this rift in liberal ranks, has been stirring and befogging public opinion at the capital. The situation which has existed for some time, with Mr. Hepburn's hostility open and aggressive but bringing no show of fire from Mr. King, has come to be taken as a matter of course. The element of surprise came when the drawbridge from the federal tower of silence was lowered and Mr. King's two lieutenants, Mr. Howe and Mr. Rogers issued forth to give battle. Mr. King supported his lieutenants and the fight was on.

There is obviously, for the present, little chance of a truce. Both Mr. Hepburn and Mr. Duplessis, premier of Quebec, have denied the allegation that they have conspirited together to oust Mr. King from the leadership of the federal liberal party. The point, however, over which there can be no dispute is that Mr. Hepburn continues to be definitely opposed to the leadership of Mr. King and that he will use his influence in the next election against Mr. King. The unknown quantity is how far Mr. Hepburn can sway the provincial liberals from their loyalty to the federal party. Liberal circles at Ottawa do not think the danger great but that, of course, is for the future to disclose. This may, thus far at least, be largely a so-called palace revolution, affecting leaders not the rank and file.

The political picture is complicated by the suggestion that Mr. Herridge may try to lead a new party and that the leader of the Reconstruction party, Mr. Stevens, will again join the Conservative fold. An interesting question which is being discussed naturally without any very definite decision being reached, is how far the fortunes of the provincial conservatives under their new leader, Col. George Drew and the federal Conservatives under Dr. Manion may be aided by this dissension in high quarters in the liberal party.

The next election, which people generally believe will be held next autumn, is still too far away for anyone to attempt to forecast what is going to happen then. The present situation while extremely interesting is nevertheless very confusing. The questions which are being asked are: what will be the extent of Mr. Hepburn's influence in the federal field? What will be the line of course of the fight between the federal and provincial leaders? Will Mr. Duplessis exert his influence in the federal election? Will the new party of Mr. Herridge, Mr. Bennett's brother-in-law, if it actually starts, become an important factor. Rightly or wrongly, the possible influence of such a new party is discounted. Will the new conservative leader in Ontario, Col. Drew rapidly become a political force in the province and thus increase the chances of the federal conservatives making a good showing at the polls next autumn? How will the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties fare in the political confusion?

It is certain the much vexed question of National unity will figure prominently in the election campaign. The atmosphere of an impending election will doubtless be clearly felt in the coming session. The quarrel in liberal ranks while not causing cleavage among the members of parliament will whet the edge of debate. No doubt is expressed here that when Mr. King discusses his quarrel with Mr. Hepburn at the caucus which he will call early in the session he will receive the full support of his followers.

The dissension is not likely to help the passage of social legislation which requires the cooperation of the provinces. For example unemployment insurance which awaits the consent of the provinces for an amendment to the constitution to give the Dominion appropriate legislative powers, will not likely get very far forward this session unless the government decides to pass a bill which will give the law to those provinces who are willing to pass enabling legislation.

The Prime Minister and Labour

Three labor organizations, the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, the Railway Transportation Brotherhood and the Federation of Catholic Workers, presented their recommendations to the government. Labor men do this before each session. The labor proposals deal with a large number of questions. The Railway Brotherhood strongly opposed any idea of unifying the railways. Next month railway workers will discuss the railway problem with the management of the railways.

During the meeting the Prime Minister defended the course his government followed during the European crisis. "Is there anyone here?" the Prime Minister asked, "who is now prepared to say that the government would have acted wisely if it had called parliament at that time (September)? I do not believe there is one who would say that." The Labor Congress, in a convention last summer, had urged the government to summon parliament to discuss the European crisis.

The Federated Catholic Workers and Labor Congress members opposed the lowering of immigration bars to refugees from Germany.

Memorials of Visit of Royalty Next May

In the years to come the special silver dollars and stamps which will commemorate the visit of the King and Queen will be treasured. The one cent special stamp to be issued will have the picture of the two little princesses, the two cent stamp a picture of the war memorial and the three cent stamps the portrait of the King and Queen.

THE TECHNIC OF LIFE

There are those who maintain that, so long as a man's heart continues to beat, he is alive. We maintain that there are many cases where a being is alive as an animal, but has ceased to live as a man.

There are others who feel that life is a burden - a weary round of meaningless duties, without background or purpose - and wonder whether it is worth while. We maintain that such have never lived, in the truest and fullest sense.

No tyro ever takes the highest pleasure in his work; but, look at the experts, from a good prize-fighter to our Edisons and Burbanks! The expert always finds his richest and most satisfying joys in the exercise of his skill, and by that joyous exercise his skill grows greater, so that a beneficient circle is formed.

Whenever any action is to be performed, from the simplest to the most complicated, a certain amount of skill is required to perform it, and the acquirement of that skill constitutes the technic of the activity, whether it be planting potatoes or playing the violin.

Life and love are made up of an enormously complicated series of activities, and, like all other activities, are susceptible of enormous development by the acquirement of their technic; which acquirement renders their practice much smoother and easier and vastly more enjoyable and profitable, to ourselves and to all with whom we come in contact.

Some will object that, while there are textbooks setting forth the technic of almost all of the limited fields of human activity, there are none dealing with the broad, general subjects of life and love. Fortunately, such an opinion is erroneous. There are numerous textbooks on both these great subjects. To mention only a few, there are such books as Herbert Spencer's "Essays on Education." Emerson's Essays on "Compensation" and "Friendship"; many of the Essays of Arnold Bennett and Frank Crane; Marjorie Greenbie's "The Arts of Leisure"; Gracian s Manual of Worldly Wisdom"; Basil King's "Conquest of Fear", and scores more dealing with the technic of living; and Havelock Ellis' "Little Essays of Love and Virtue" (as well as many of his other writings), Dr. Long's "Sane Sex Life and Sane Sex Living," Van de Velde's "Ideal Marriage", and many other sound and reliable books dealing with the technic of loving.

If more of us would devote even a small amount of time to the systematic and purposeful study of these great occupations in which we are all engaged, life could be changed at least for such students, from a drab and unprofitable interlude between two realms of darkness, to an exquisite and profitable art, whose practice would lead to inestimable joy for the practitioner, and immeasurable amelioration of the condition of the world in general and its inhabitants in particular.

WINTER MEETINGS ANNOUNCED

A special series of meetings of interest to farmers and farmer's wives as well as sons and daughters will be held at four locations in the county according to an announcement which has just been issued from the Department of Agriculture at Cayuga. These meetings will be held for five days at each place with the exception of the fir. series, where a holiday cuts the first day off. Preliminary arrangements are now being made for hall accommodation, etc.

These meetings are similar to a very successful series held in the county last January. It was decided to again hold thes meetings in the immediate vicinity and in that way endeavor to serve four communities in a better way.

The places and dates have now been arranged and are as follows:

South Cayuga, January 3rd - 6th, inclusive.

Nanticoke, January 9th - 13th, inclusive.

Springvale, January 16th - 20th, inclusive.

York, January 23rd - 27th, inclusive.

A great many special features are being arranged and it is expected that the communities thus served will take full advantage of the opportunity and attend in large numbers.

It has been especially pointed out that the meetings are open to every one with no age limit being set.

Further announcement regarding halls, speakers, etc., will be made at a later date.
