OUR GOOD FRIEND WINTER

Winter brings many picture opportunities.

OLD Man Winter may not be popular with everybody but, as an inexhaustible inventor of opportunities for taking beautiful pictures, he is certainly a good friend of amateur photographers. Remember that with his tools of snow and wind, he is a landscape artist, painter, etcher, and sculptor of the first order. Remember also that his handiwork is fleeting, so do not fail to have your camera ever ready to take pictures before the opportunities are gone.

Each snowfall creates new subjects for picture taking, for you will find that each time the snow mantle is put on differently, changing the landscape to obliterate some features on one occasion, bringing them into relief on another, giving a peculiar charm to objects that do not attract attention in other seasons, and often displaying weird or fantastic snow formations, never to be exactly repeated.

These magic changes of scenery make of a snapshooter's paradise. Long shadows on the white snow add beauty and interest to many a scene. Such a simple thing as a picket fence casting its serried outline over a curving snowdrift that it has helped to build may make a photograph of "Winter" that any salon would be proud to exhibit. Or a lone pine tree, sitting in a graceful bowl of snow the wind has moulded around its base, fantastic cornices on the hill tops, the drifted roads, the weather-blackened old mill etched against a white hillside —these suggest but a few of the picture taking opportunities which winter offers for the camera owner.

Then, too, there are the human interest pictures of winter sports—action shots of skiing, sliding, skating, and ice boat racing—not to forget Sally, Pal and the snow but they're laboriously hollowed out of the great drift in the yard. Chances like these prove a source of joy to those clever enough to shoot at the right moment and with the right exposure and focus.

With regard to exposures in winter, many think that because snow is white, they should not be so long as in summer, but remember on the other hand that light is not so strong in winter. The old rule—expose for the shadows and let the highlights take care of themselves—works fully as well for snow pictures under most conditions. When, however, you wish to take a picture to emphasize shadows, as in the case of the picket fence, a sky filter placed upside down on the lens (that is, yellow part at the bottom) so that the light from the snow will be subdued in passing through should reproduce them even better with no loss of detail in other parts of the picture.

So put on the galoshes and the muffler after the next snowfall, and wade out with your camera. With a little thought to composition, you will come back with a "picture no artist can paint" and more than one.

A Weekly Review Of National Affairs

(By "Spectator")

Ottawa, January 25th — Pursuing its exhaustive inquiry, the commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations under W. N. Rowell have been discussing briefs presented by large national organizations. In the quiet of the railway committee room of the House of Commons the Commissioners have been hearing these briefs explained by the representatives of these organizations. What impresses the listener in these hearings is that the submissions have been elaborately and carefully prepared and that as an exposition of what is wrong they are first rate, but that in suggesting remedies they are not quite so convincing. In some cases those appearing before the Commissoin seem to think that all they need to do is present a picture of conditions as they exist, and the picture is as a rule pretty gloomy and leave it with the Commissioners to furnish the remedies. The Commissioners being human would doubt less welcome aid in solving the colossal problems which face them in this inquiry.

Constructive suggestions on a wide range of subjects have however been advanced by industrial and social organizations, such groups as the Canadian Manufacturers Association, insurance bodies, real estate boards, League for Social Reconstruction, League of Nations in Canada, etc. It would be foolish to hazard a guess at what practical results will come from the hearings of the Commission They are a fact finding body and will give recommendations to the government. But it is doubtful if since confederation there has ever been painted a more complete canvas of the inner working of our federal constitution particularly in its financial features as that now being made on the records of the commission. It is like the picture of Oliver Cromwell Not a line or wrinkle is left out. It would need a very profound and astute student to find out any weakness in the financial relations between the Dominion and the provinces that is not being placed before the Commission.

From the observer's standpoint, perhaps the most interesting points brought out in the briefs laid before the Commission relate to the country's taxatoin system. A great deal of reference has been made to waste and duplication in the system and a greater consolidation and centralization of tax collecting media in the country are suggested as a means of remedying to some extent at least these defects.

Within a few days now the new session of parliament will open, and the Speech from the Throne will outline in general form the main features of the legislation which the government will bring before parliament. Letters have been sent to the provincial premiers informing them of the nature of the proposed amendment to the British North America Act which would give the Dominion the power to pass an unemployment insurance act. The wording of the amendment would be simple enough simply adding to the powers designated as under the jurisdiction of the Dominion a phrase referring to unemployment insurance. Amendments have been made to the constitution of Australia in a similar way. The actual way in which the amendment would be made would be through a joint address of both houses of parliament to the British parliament. The action of the British parliament would be merely a formality.

It is fair to assume that the session will be lively and probably quite long. The question of power export, tariffs, defence of unemployment relief and insurance, trade relations and treaties, and many other questions will give plenty of scope for discussion. Western members have already indicated their intention of making reductions in tariffs on farm equipment and other articles used in their part of the country a subject of categorical questioning.

CANADIAN WOMEN'S BUYING HABITS CAN ASSIST UNEMPLOYMENT

What Canadian women buy every day of the week has a direct bearing on the number of people who are employed in Canada, and government statistics of imports show there is a wide-open field in which they can increase the number of men and women who receive a week ly pay envelope if more women "Buy Canadian" on every possible occasion, according to a study made by the National Produced in Canada Association, which was released recently

"It has been estimated that women influence 87 percent. of the purchases made in Canada, either directly or indirectly," the statement said "This is true then it is in the national interest to study what they buy because of its relationship to employment. Among the purchases which they make directly almost every week of the year are such things as furniture, drugs and medicines, woollen wearing apparel, leather boots and shoes, handkerchiefs, silk stockings, felt hats, soap, fresh fruits, vegetables, oilcloth, fish, cutlery, cheese, etc., to mention only some of the more important items.

"In these categories alone, imports in the twelve months ending October 1937, amounted to $38,325,-478. Bearing in mind women's influence in buying, it can be reasonably assumed that it was their choice which influenced the importation of these items into Canada, yet a survey of industrial plants and other producing agencies in Canada shows that practically all of these are produced or made in Canada. In so doing they employ Canadian men and women, apart altogether from those who are indirectly affected by the manufacture or sale of these commodities such as employees, of stores, allied industries, etc.

"The purchase of these imported items means the continued unemployment of Canadians in these industries in buying what otherwise, would be at work if Canadian women insisted on the Produced in Canada merchandise at all times.

"It must be clear therefore, that women can, by their purchasing habits, affect the number of people who fore, they "Buy Canadian" at all times when price and quality are suitable, they will be doing their share in helping to restore more men and women to the pay rolls in the Dominion."

THE NINTH CONCESSION BRIDGE

In view of the interest shown with respect to the construction of the Township Bridge on the Ninth concession of Walpole at the annual nomination meeting, we decided to inspect this structure and get a picture in order to give our readers a better idea what the structure in question looks like. There is no doubt that this bridge will serve the purpose for which it was built for more than one generation, nor can it be suggested that an ice jam will ever take it out. There is merit also in the suggestion that a bridge as large as the one built was hardly necessary at this particular point.

The two pictures above will give some idea of the catastrope that occurred to the Fall's View Bridge at Niagara Falls over the week-end. We are indebted to Mr. Larry Gilbert of the Bank of Commerce Staff for these pictures which were taken from the same spot immediately before and after the bridge fell.

A Weekly Review Of National Affairs

(By "Spectator")

Ottawa, February 1 — The speech from the Throne with which every session of parliament is opened gives a general survey of the legislation which the government proposes to bring in during the session. It also touches on general conditions in the country but it makes no attempt to cover completely the work of parliament. It is a sign post indicating the road along which the government and parliament will travel. Many bills which will be presented to parliament have not yet been drafted, and events transpiring while the session is on will doubtless raise issues and bring about legislation not contemplated at the opening of the session.

It is therefore only in a general way that the speech delivered by His Excellency the Governor General at the beginning of the present session forecasts the course of the work of parliament during the next few months. In regard to social legislation it is clear that the government hopes to secure an early approval by the provinces of the amendment to the constitution which will allow parliament to pass its unemployment insurance measure. Whether such approval will be forthcoming it is for the future to disclose. At the moment the chances do not seem very bright.

A good deal of space was given to the work of the Royal Commission on Dominion Provincial Relations which is examining the economic and financial basis of confederation and the distribution of legislative powers "in the light of changed conditions which have arisen in the past seventy years." It was stated that the stresses strains which economic and social development since confederation have placed on Canada's governmental structure. "Has disclosed the necessity for adjustments which will enable it the more effectively to serve provincial and national needs and to promote and preserve Canadian unity." The commission will continue for some months to gather the necessary information; it will then issue its report with recommendations and then it will be in the hands of "appropriate authorities" to decide what should be done.

The statement in the speech that arrangements are being completed for the inauguration of a national trans-Canada air service refers to the airway for which fields have been constructed throughout the Dominion, which has already been making trial flights in the West and which in the coming summer will doubtless reach Montreal as a standardized service. It is a gigantic undertaking but it will place Canada definitely on the air lines of the world, and will link with the transatlantic services coming into operation before the end of 1940.

The Transport department will sponsor legislation to extend the authority the board of railway commissioners. Last session an endeavor to create a transport board out of the railway commission was defeated in the senate. This year changes in the original bill will be made to meet objections that arose last session. One of the cardinal features of the original bill was to bring other forms of transport under some degree of control. The railways being the only form at present regulated under the board of railway commissioners.

Considerable interest will be aroused when the legislation "with a view to furthering the principle of parliamentary control of the export of power" is introduced. This question of power export, it will be remembered was the occasion of a lively exchange of views between the prime minister of the Dominion and the premier of Ontario.

Gratification was expressed at the substantial economic advance of Canada at the increase in revenues, the expansion in trade, the increase in employment and the decrease in the numbers receiving unemployment
