Pullets for the laying flock must have full opportunity right from hatching time up to matur-ity, to make normal, healthy growth. This requires first, an adequate supply of the proper feeds, and, second, good environ-mental conditions. Overcowding should be avoided and precautions taken to guard the health of the birds. Any birds showing signs of disease or weakness should be disposed of immediately. It should be constantly borne in mind that the maintenance of a healthy, profitable flock requires that culling should be a continuous process the year round. Commencing when the first few pullets start to lay, it is a recommended practice to go over the pullet flock every week or two moving to their permanent winter quarters all those that seem almost ready to lay or have already started, states L. A. Gnae-dinger, Head Poultryman, Dominion Experimental Station, Lennoxville, P.Q. Feeding should have been such that at this time, the birds should be heavily fleshed and fairly fat. The subsequent feeding program should be designed to prevent any marked decrease body weight. Each bird should be carefully examined at this time and any that are poorly fleshed, very small, or deformed should be culled out. Heavy, sustained egg production demands healthy, welleveloped bodies and rugged con-
