CHAPTER I

The massive, steel-barred gates of the Jarillo Penitentiary swung back, disclosing a cavernous, shadowy, hopeless arch beyond. From those gates walked a man, a slender, wiry man of slightly more than medium height. His shoulders were not of extraordinary width, but they were erect, flat, and packed with smoothly coordinating muscles. His chest was arched and deep, his waist lean. His face, from the nose upward was of a young man, not over thirty years in age at most. That nose nostril. The eyes were of steely health. But there was something the depths, like a living, never fad-

Nests of tiny wrinkles spread long years of facing strong sunlight, hot winds, and illimitable distances. The short, crisp hair beneath his floppy and battered old sombrero was dark brown, slightly curly and with a dusting of gray at the temples. A Stern Mask

It was the mouth and jaw which made a cold, stern mask of what was otherwise a reasonably amiable and strong, the mouth wide and hinting of whimsicality, were it not for the sensitive lips set in a hard line of repression. Besides the worn sombrero, his garb was made up of faded shirt and jeans, and a pair of battered, high-heeled boots which showed signs of long disuse.

This, on that sunny, early spring morning, was Edward (Slim) Loyale, ex-convict No. 8214, with eighteen months served of a three-year sentence, and with eighteen months cf parole ahead of him, before he would once more be an entirely free A closer observer than the stolid

Glass Buttons Provide Safer Night Driving

R. M. Smith, Ontario's deputy minister of highways, announced last week his department would exsafety device which is being tried out on the middle road.

The device consists of a number of small glass buttons, about the size of a half dollar, placed in sets of three on short posts about 100 feet apart and seven feet from the shoulder of the road. So far they have been tried on a mile and a half stretch of highway just west of Oakville, on the south lane of the niddle road. The buttons catch the gleam the headlights of a car at 100 foo intervals and reflect the light, the deputy-minister explained. They appear to a fast-travelling car like a continuous streak of light that outlines the road clearly and shows up any pedestrian or cyclist.

the understanding, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is much more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices. 34. And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question. The meaning here is that we should have the same solicitous regard and care for our neighbours which we have for ourselves. It is really another form of the Golden Rule. Jesus, perceiving that the scribe answered intelligently, said, "You are not far from the kingdom of God." Paul Reaffirms It

I Cor. 8:4. Concerning therefore the eating of things sacrificed to idols, we know that no idol is any-Is no God but one. 5. There is no God, no real Divine Being, but one. As in so many other places in the New Testament, Paul is not content with a negative denial, but now brings forth a positive affirmation—the negative denial, but now brings forth a positive affirmation—the gods of the heathen are non-existent, but there is a God who is God the Father, from whom all things come, and in whom, through the Lord Jesus Christ, we are.

6. Yet to us there is one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we unto him; and one Lord. Jesus Christ, through whom are all things, and we through him. See things, and we through him. See John 1:3; Heb. 1: 2, 3; Col. 1:16; Rom. 11:36. Note the contrast between the many gods of the Christians. The whole passage is a clear acknowledgment on the part of the apostle Paul that the Lord Jesus Christ was external in his existence. Our God is not a rival of any other gods. In him is life, and without him there is no life.
