public. In 1926 the "constitutional question" centering around the authority of the Governor-General was the high-light; in 1930 it was "cure employment or perish in the attempt" in 1935 the cry was "King or Chaos."
So far 1939 has lamentably failed to produce either an outstanding issue or a bright slogan. However, there is plenty of time for these to emerge.

David Lewis, who promises all parties concerned "an effective campaign" this time. It will be interesting to see whether the C.C.F., which polled nearly 400,000 votes in 1935, and probably would have polled another 100,000 more if Mr. Stevens had not been in the field, can assume a position of real influence.

The Herridge Enigma

If all third party strength was united, one could safely predict a real drive against the tradition, with his history, with his tradition, with his character, there would pass at the same time from earth a large part of the heroism and the romance of the world, those intangible qualities which, perhaps more than anything else, make us capable of plain living, high thinking and great deeds."

I would like to quote more from this little book, but perhaps what has been quoted is enough to arouse the interest of you readers of this column to the extent that you will expend the modest sum asked for the book, and settle down to the real enjoyment of reading it yourself. It is without doubt one of the most charming books any politician has written and the publishers well deserve the best thanks we can give them for putting it within reach of everyone.
