

Seen From A Bombing Plane, Ocean-Going Ships Are Like Toys

Released by the German censor, this photograph was alleged to have been taken through the bomb bay of a Nazi bomber on a reconnaissance flight across the North Sea to England. A few ships may be seen on the smooth sea. From this picture you may get an idea of just how small a target a ship is for a bomber. In order to be reasonably certain of a hit the German bombers must dive down on their target. It is during this diving maneuver that the anti-aircraft batteries get in much of their deadly work.
