For the contemporary man in the street the Christion ethic is rooted in a narrow Christion ethic is rooted in a narrow Christian theology, and countries which tion theology and anything which casts doubt upon the latter weakens the imperativeness of the former. The important and immediate issue seems to be whether we can produce a generation to which Christian means. ms to be whether we can produce a generation to which Christian morality will be a categorical imperative irrespective of what happens in the fields of criticism, philosophy and science. Can there be moral rearmament without a revival of religion and can there be a revival of religion without a reaffirmation and reacceptance of Christian theology? The answer seems to be in the negative, but unless we can find a theology that is at once acceptable to the modern mind, and effective enough to produce a revival that will save the whole man in all his activities, Spengler may prove to be right.

Mrs. Robinson gave a splendid paper on International Relations which was very acceptable at such times as these. The St. John's Ambulance Course was discussed and was decided to let it drop for the time being.

Mrs. Bailey gave a fine report of the convention in Hamilton and Mrs. Leathong reported on the girls project.

The highlight of the meeting was a visit from our county president, Mrs. Sutor, who talked to us of the aims and objects of the Institute and also explained very fully the duties of the different conveners. Mrs. Sutor repeated the Institute Creed, defining each promise and stating that successful living is continual learning. She stressed friendliness towards new comers particularly those of foreign birth and also advised creating community activities to interest the voung people. Mrs.
