HOW NAZIS USE "HOMELY WOMEN" FOR SPIES

Pretty women spies nearly always get into trouble, so the Nazis are giving preference in this matter to ugly women. Read in The American Weekly with the March 30 issue of The Detroit Sunday Times how a homely housewife arrest by the British revealed this radical departure in spying. Be sure to get The Detroit Sunday Times this week and every week.

CALLING O. H. PIERCE

a nice, easy way of telling a complete stranger he is under police suspicion as your accomplice in unspecified misdeeds. Try finding a bright, offhand manner of breaking the news to a gentleman you have never seen that the Mounties are on his trail along of you. You will see all the difficulties almost at once. This reporter saw so many of them that he gave up.

It was unworthy but that is what she did. Mr. O. H. Pierce, she told herself, would be hooped not knowing. Leave him in innocence, she told herself, to believe that the mysterious telephone calls he escapes are his dentist to remind him six months are up. Leave him to go carefree as long as he can, not realizing that the Harris tweed jacket hovering intermittently on the edge of vision covers a plain clothes man of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

That's what she told herself, but it wasn't right. O. H. Pierce should have been warned.

* * *

O. H. Pierce came into the interrogation quite early on the summer day when, believe the RCMP, the RCMP did not send a constable to investigate a couple of reporters who incorporated as "Culling Canada," had offended somebody by calling for some leaks.

"Who," the constable said, "is O. H. Pierce?"

"What," the constable said, "has he to do with Culling Canada?"

Neither reporter knew the answers they didn't know who was O. H. Pierce. They didn't know what he had to do with Culling Canada.

They told the constable who wasn't there, if Mr. Lapointe will believe the RCMP, that they did not know. The constable went on talking as though he were there, but had not heard.

He had tried, he said to get Mr. Pierce at his home. He had tried to get him at his office. He had been told each time he tried that Mr. Pierce was out. Mr. Pierce was a hard man to get in touch with. A reporter said it was too bad, and suggested that a mistake might have been made in associating Mr. Pierce's name with their calls for tarics. The constable said no mistake had been made.

* * *

You can have no idea, until you have tried being non-investigated, how terrific sensitive the questions can become in the mouths of an official questioner. Let a constable intimate, not by word but by more mature of tone, that he thinks you do know what you have only finished telling him you do not know, and
