The Germans believe they can win all they want from a Russian campaign inside six weeks. They may be right. They have only been wrong once so far this war. All they want is three things: Wheat oil and division among the people of surviving democracies.

If they can win the first two, they may be able to balance by swift gain the long-term loss of Russia as a neutral door to bring in supplies from South America by the Pacific. If they can win the last, they may win the war with it.

Division in Bittain is not likely.
