THE JARVIS RECORD, JARVIS, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JULY 2nd, 1941

there are thousands and thousands of them. I watched an Airman come in, pick his card out of the rack, fumble in his pocket for his identification card, punch a time clock as he passed the cards, and then deposit his card in another rack inside. A glance over the cards showed that while most of the cards were white, a few were blue; those unlucky men were confined to barracks because they forgot to make their beds, or for some other offence.

Reds - Then and Now

To an old soldier who had spent many a night in Exhibition Camp in 1916, sleeping on hard boards, those beds seemed unreal. They stretched in endless rows in every direction, like the young stalks in a field of corn—and each one had springs and a mattress. But my Wing Adjutant, pointed out that there were also white sheets and pillow cases. Some of the boys who came in here never used before and keep them carefully folded up under the mattress. I sat in the Adjutant's office while he explained to me just what they do with the raw recruit at the Manning Depot to make them into efficient Airman. In four weeks or so—drills, inoculations, lectures and the like. A knock at the door interrupted the talk and a telegram was delivered. It was from a wife with a foreign-sounding name, living out on the prairies somewhere. She wanted to know where her husband was; she had not heard from him for six or seven weeks. He had far overstay a leave. But there are few like that. The majority are keen to learn and get ahead. If not, they are soon needed out. There are twice, two different "wives" have been sent to the same man.

As I said, these are the exceptions. The young man comes to the Manning Depot in civilian clothes with the most exciting weeks of his life lying ahead. A few are probably homesick at first, though the Adjutant said he had no complaints along that line—and few about anything else in the camp. The men in uniform and his kit. I saw two men in brand-new uniforms going out that afternoon and a proud-looking pair they were.

In the first week, there are lectures in evening. After that comes guard duty for the future air crews, with lectures and physical training. Then the coming pilots and gunners go out to various schools on guard duty till there are vacancies at the Initial Training Schools. The men of the ground crews stay three or four weeks, then get on to various trade schools.

Feeding the Five Thousand

Lunch time was past before I went to the Manning Depot. When I saw the dining room, I was sorry. I would have liked to see a meal there, but there might have been complications. I was with two officers to a dishonoured sign on the door saying that officers were strictly forbidden to eat in the men's mess. They just solemnly affirmed it was because the men got better meals, so some of the officers had formed the habit of going away from their own mess and eating with the men. I asked some of the men about it and they just smiled, but they said the food really was good. I think maybe the food was the simple truth. I saw their mess, too, and although it had white table cloths, it didn't look like a dining room.

Nowhere does one get the impression of size at the Manning Depot as in the men's dining hall. Row after row of long tables stretch across the width of the Coliseum. A skylight makes the room bright and a great eagle emblem covers one wall. The tables were set for a surprise. The men were carrying in big bowls of Canadian apples, one surprise for each of the cooks must be skilled mechanics. There were huge motor-driven food mixers with metal bowls large enough to mash a bushel and a half of potatoes at a time. Half a bag is dumped in a big hopper, a switch turned on and a stream of water from a hose directed into the machine. It whirls around and the peelings are taken off by coarse disks of sandpaper and go down the drain. There isn't any waste because of unskilled peelers. Instead of hundreds of unfortunate food kitchen patrol, half a dozen men were digging out the deep eyes.

There seemed to be wonders everywhere around that kitchen. I went into a big refrigerator room where the meat was stored and into another where deep pans of jelly cooled on the shelves. The meat stock for tomorrow's soup boiled in great metal vats. Fresh bread and cakes lined the shelves of the big pantries.

Plethora of Recreation

Beside the dining room is the recreation room, with easy chairs and reproductions of paintings of Canada's air heroes of the last war on the walls. There is a radio, the gift of some friend, and writing desks here and there, most of them in use that afternoon.

The theatre is in the north corner of the Coliseum, and it has a full-size stage, the letters "R.C.A.F." on the curtain, and thousands of seats. An electric organ provides the music. Current movies are shown there several times a week. The arena where the horses performed during "The American Weekly" was used for games. At first it was left with the tank on the floor till an epidemic of gas and suspicion on the tank. Now there's a new asphalt floor in the ring and the cold have ceased. Several different Detroit Sunday Times this week games were in progress there that

Rev. W. J. Holley Accepts Charge at Old Windham

The Rev. W. J. Holley, B.Th., was inducted as the Minister of the Pastoral Charge of Old Windham on Friday evening last, at a special service held in Old Windham United Church. The induction service was presided over by the Rev. R. E. Newman, of Waterford, assisted by the Rev. F. W. Mahaffy, B.A., of Port Dover, who gave the charge to the congregation in a very timely address, and Capt. (Rev.) J. W. Oliver, of the Hamilton Army Training School, and former pastor of this circuit, gave the charge to the minister. A reception followed the induction service when the members present from the three churches of the circuit were introduced to their new minister and his wife. Short speeches were made by Rev. J. W. Oliver and Mr. Roy Collier, to which Mr. and Mrs. Holley suitably replied, thanking them for their good wishes. A splendid lunch was served by the ladies of the church.

The Rev. W. J. Holley is well-known in this district, since coming to it in 1928 he has served the United Church on the circuits of Lyndoch, Jarvis and Townsend. In 1938 Mr. Holley took a year's leave of absence from the Presbytery and spent the year preaching in South Wales, returning in 1939 to the Town Centre Circuit. Mr. Holley is a veteran of the Great War having served as a Signaller with the 3rd Battalion C.E.F. in France, and with the Royal Air Force in which he received his commission as a Lieutenant. Mr. Holley is the fifth returned soldier to serve the Old Windham Circuit.

The Reichel Farms were awarded The Grand Reserve Champion Hereford, Junior and Reserve Junior, as well as senior Champion female, junior and reserve champion, and the Grand Champion and reserve female.

Former Resident Meets Old Friends

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert W. Roberts of Toronto, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Agnew, also of Toronto, visited in Jarvis over last week end as guests of the Jarvis sisters, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Belbeck. It is over forty years since Mr. Agnew was a resident of Jarvis, who he was employed in the bakery of the late Charles G. Allen, on the site now occupied by L. L. McBride Druggist. It afforded genial Harry much pleasure in meeting many of his never forgotten friends of four decades ago many of whom had some difficulty in recognizing Harry and not a few had to give up the ghost before learning his name.

Since leaving this Village, Mr. Agnew has lived in Clinton, Brantford, Cleveland, Ohio, Cornwall and other places, finally taking up residence in Toronto.

The Agnews have two children, a son and daughter, both married and with children. One older whom he was so delighted to meet again, was Morgan Hewson's aged mother, and was surprised to find her so sprightly and young looking despite her ninety summers.

The evil that poisoned Europe

by Judith Robinson

He would not want any fuss made over his going. He would smile, as I remember seeing him smile once in a sort of merry embarrassment, at the idea that he should be singled out from other boys as young, as well-loved and as brave, who accepted the same risk as he did.

He was a boy like the thousands of others who are fighting, or training to fight, to save beauty from the beast. He died in training, before his turn had come to go into battle. There is nothing unusual in that, these sorrowful days.

And yet there is something about this boy's death that sets it apart.

He was, I think, one of the most beautiful boys I have ever seen. He had all the things a boy should have in his face and bearing: strength and gentleness and openness and swift intelligence and humour. There was a sort of radiance about him too as that passerby in the street would have to follow him with his eyes and smile, remembering their own youth.

He did easily all the things a boy longs to do. He was captain of half his school team, among the first in every sport, the honour student in his graduating class. And with it all he was unspoiled as a duffer, taking all his boyish successes with the same sensitive, smiling earnest in finding life good and the world friendly.

He went from school into the Air Force at eighteen. He died in a crash the day before he was to get his wings.

That's all. The story ends there, except that this boy was a Jew as well as a Canadian.

Like Christ, he was a Jew. Like Christ, he died for the salvation of man. Whether the salvation will prove worth the sacrifice can be questioned perhaps in either case. But the sacrifice cannot be questioned. They were made and made willingly for us all.

Tell it to the next Anti-Semite you find dishonouring Christ's name, by calling himself Christian.

It may be inevitable, human nature being what it is, a little nobility and a lot of shabby stuff, that all of us should try at times to escape from our own shortcomings in hunting down the shortcomings of others. It is, perhaps, understandable that the shabbier among us should try to make it an inter-racial hunt for their own shabby ends. It seems to be inescapable, in the bitterness and the suffering of unequal sacrifice that, even among the multitudes who are misled into turning their bitterness not against those responsible for suffering, but against the innocent, but (continued on page eight)

Golden Wedding TO BE OBSERVED

An interesting event will take place on Sunday, July 13th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Evans of Nanticoke when they will celebrate their Golden Wedding Anniversary. February 4th, was their wedding date, but circumstances made it necessary to postpone the event until this summer. They were pleased to meet their friends at their home either in the afternoon between the hours of three and five or during the evening at any time after seven.
