Estimates of the value of the "invisible balance" of the tourist rade in previous years have been found to be much too high and have been cut down. The federation of mayors and mun feipalities which held its annual convention in Ottawa in the past week made no formal demands upon the government because of the serious-ness of the war situation. A number of important motions, however, were agreed in the convention. They related to government's attitude to-wards relief, to a more equitable distribution of war industries through-out the country and to the need of keeping down capital expenditures during the war. It was urged that at the conclusion of the war the armed forces should not be demobilized until jobs were available for the men. After an illness extending over many months, Addie Edith Atkinson, beloved wife of Frederick A Marr, passed away at her home in the Township of Woodhouse, on Tuesday morning, May 6th, in her Sixty-sixth year.

Deceased was born in the Township of Walpole in 1875, an only daughter of the late Benjamin Atkinson and Maggie Parker. Her mother died when she was quite young, after which she made her home with her grandparents, Mr, and Mrs. Jesse Parker, at Varency until her marriage about Forty years ago. After they were married, they took up farming near Garnet where they successfully farmed for five years when they moved to the Marr homestead where she passed away.

The newspaper man asks himself the question: "What should be my attitude toward the churches?"

The Press And The Churches

The Press And The Churches

They've enough and to spare. A letter from home.

From a sweetheart or pal. Some candy or chocolate, Would do very well.

But what seems to be They're greatest regret, Is the fact there's a shortage He endeavours to answer that question so that he will be fair both to the churches and to himself

Churches sometimes assume the attitude that as they are supported solely by voluntary donations, and as they are a spiritual and moral force in the community, any publicity desired should be given without charge by the newspaper. Strangely enough the churches do not expect the same privilege from any other business or profession. It should be remembered at the outset that most publishers are church members, and that s individuals they are decidedly interested in the welfare of the church with which they are affiliated. They give regularly and as generously as their circumstances permit. They attend the various functions designed to raise funds for the continuance of the church's work. As such they must be considered as any other church member who is conscientiousyl striving to support the church and what it stands for.

While newspapers are more generous with space to churches than to other institutions, this is simply a recognition by the press of the premier place held by the church in the spiritual and moral sphere in the community. However the church has no legal right to expect the press to give more generously than any individual church member. It is not expected of the man who sells the church fuel, or the public utilities which serve the church. In larger centres it is not expected that the organist should give his services free, or that the caretaker should

The press, we believe, will always recognize the position and value of the church in the community. It will realise that the community without the church would be like a rudderless ship, not knowing whence the tide of events and fortune might lead it. The press will continue to give service to the church as one important institution to another, but the church must also realise that to continue its service, not only to the church but to the community, the newspaper must have an income, and that income can only come from the space it sells in its columns. This same reasoning must apply to charitable organizations in the community. To them the publisher and the men and women who work for the publisher give generously of their private means and of their time and talent. They too must prosper if they are to continue the support to the church, and all kindred organizations seeking to carry out an uplifting work in the community.
