is strong and free and honest enough to take stock of its own shortcomings admit them openly and set about making them good without time wasted trying to camouflage them? Sharp and plain-spoken criticism is being directed at shortcomings of the Churchill Government in England now. It has done nothing to lessen American affection and admiration for either Mr. Churchill or the English people. It can and is doing a great deal to strengthen the hand and the resolve of the best men in the British Government to deal with entrenched incompetents.

Mr. McCarthy is an old man. He enjoys a pleasant and well-paid post and the patronage of a Prime Minister. As director of Canadian Aluminum he has lately seen an extrawartime dividend of $2. a share divided among his shareholders. It is natural that he should find all for the best in the best of all possible war efforts.

But there are other and younger the best in the best of the war efforts.

But there are other and younger Canadians less happily situated. There is one for example, who lost the best part of his arm as a direct result of his service in this war. When this reporter talked with him last he had just refused for the second time to sign discharge papers containing a trick clause put in by the economy branch of Canada's war effort. The trick clause would have enabled a grateful country to escape paying pension to this one of its MANY ALREADY persons and firms affected by the licensing order through the co-operation of the thirteen thousand Canadian post offices and their mail carriers, municipal and rural. There hope that it may incite a few Canadians who helped fight the last war to ask a question or two about this war, and require the answers.

Here goes:
A party of Canadian soldiers invalided home from England reached Toronto last week. Some were sick some were injured, one was badly cut up with shrapnel wounds. Nearly all had gone overseas 22 months ago all had gone overseas 22 months ago with the first Canadian Division. Among them was one United States citizen, now safely back in the Unit-ed States.
