

British soldiers have come to the aid of farmers in southeastern England and are offsetting the farm shortage by taking a turn in the harvest fields. But they work according to their own rules and the most important is that harvesting is fun. Above an accordion player supplies music while they work. The wagon is loaded with corn already gathered.

Japan's First Line Air Strength About Five Thousand Planes

Japan's "air industry is woefully weak and her air force is of low offensie strength." Lucien Zacharoff, aeronautics authority, writes in the September issue of the magazine "Aviation." He questions whether the Jap nese air force would be a factor defending its own cities. The first-line air strength he places at no more than 5,000 planes and possibly at only 3,000. He says the island empire's personnel is probably 5,000.

"It sounds incredible," he writes, "that Japan's army and navy air-training schools are graduating a total of much fewe than 1,000 pilots a year. "The quality of their education may be appraised by the fact; admitted by okio censors; that even in peace-time Japanese military and commerical fliers have the highest accident rate in the world." Most of the leading Japanes military aircraft types are called obsolete or obsolescent by Zacharoff, who adds that Japan's current production of military planes of all types, including trainers, is about 250 a month.

Current United States produ ion, as announced by the Office Production Management, is about 1.500. The writer rates Far East Soat air contingents as more power ful than Japan's and Dutch-British air power in the Pacific as the Grand Trunk Western lines. greater than that of the Japanese

Two Years Too Late!

"Now that Berlin and other parts of Germany are getting a taste of total air war as a result of the combined attacks of the Royal and Russian air forces, an official Nazi spokesman pleads for 'really humane warfare.' "The Nazis should have though of that before they laid waste Warsaw in September, 1939; before they wantonly destroyed half of Rotterdam in May, 1940, and before they began their ruthless air assaults on London, Coventry, Plymouth, Liverpool and other British cities a year ago, in which more than 40,000 civilians been killed to date.
"Nazi hypocrisy reaches new
