Mr. Churchill was dressed in the same clothes one sees in so many of his photographs. That is not surprising since his suits are as strictly rationed as those of every Britisher. He had on a black coat, with a white handkerchief showing conspicuously over the edge of the breast pocket. He wore the famous bow tie with the spots and spectacles with heavy rims. The skin of his face and head was a bright rosy pink as I looked down at close range. The only conspicuous adornment was a heavy gold watch chain across his broad vest. There is no need to quote from that speech now. Partly it reviewed the course of the war, but to a greater that was an attack of a greater to the special power of the stream of the war, but to a greater to satisfy the inner-man.

It contained plenty of punch as all his speeches do. He used gestures. Sometimes he grasped the edge of the table in front of him; at times, he held the lapels of his coat or clasped his hands behind his back or over his stomach. It was the words that counted, rather than the manner of their delivery.

Just as soon as Mr. Churchill had completed his speech. I hurried out of the gallery and met the other Canadians. Mr. Bracken was waiting stairways and along corridors, past three or four more policemen. Out waited for him to arrive.

He came in a few minutes.

He came in a few minutes. Already, he had lighted one of his farmous cigars. He invited us into his shook hands were introduced by the Minister of Information, he shook hands with each one, asking the man. He is an old newspaper.

The room is large and L-shaped. A huge, ornate fireplace is conspicuous on one wall and on either side ministers of the past. In front of the fireplace is Mr. Churchill's desk, he walked up and down all the time he was talking to us. He was bubbling over with energy and apparatust delivered. He began with a joke.

"You have had plenty of time to see the City of London? You have visited the damaged areas and the rulns?"

Lost in Rural England

Perhaps it was just as well that I had the map. The drivers knew the city, but as we gof away from main roads and approached a swampy portion of the coast, they got lost I had noticed the leading car take a wrong turn in a busy town but our driver had to follow till the leader decided he was lost. Then the map came in handy. We arrived at a city on the Thames estuary only a few minutes late for luncheon.

The owner of that big seaside hotel gave us a royal welcome. Over the
