A Near Miss

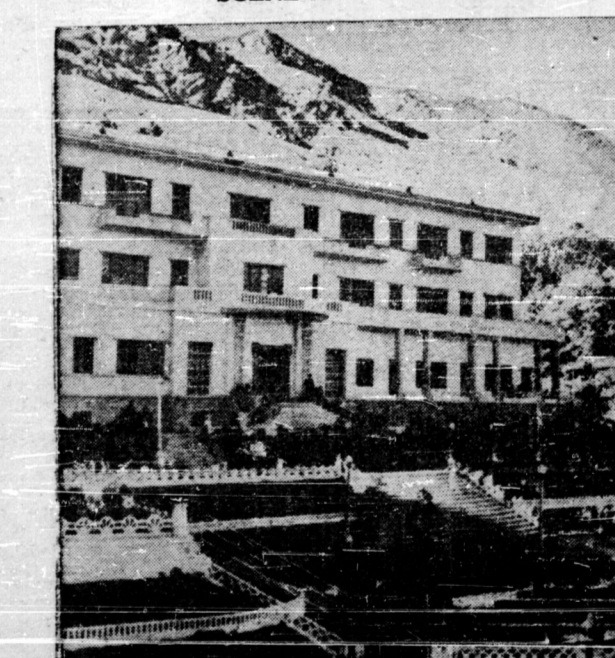

The tax assessor's office had to decide on which side of the Canada-United States border an old lady's newly purchased farm lay. Surveyors finally announced it was just inside the United States border. The old lady smiled in relief. "I'm so glad to know that," she said. "I've heard that 'inners in Canada are terribly severe.'"—The Financial Post.

"Well listen, soldier, don't ever let me catch you out with the other sex."

NO MORE "DOSING" MY CONSTIPATION—I'VE CORRECTED THE CAUSE!

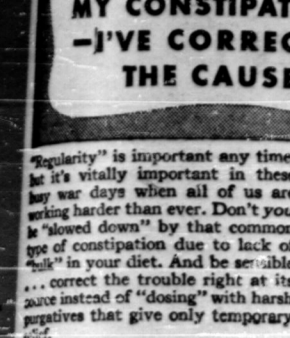

Constipation is important every time. It's vitally important if it is being treated as a mere "dosage" of laxative. Don't "dose" your bowels down by that common error of constipation due to lack of "bulk" in your diet. And be sure you correct the trouble right at its source. Ogdens, with its natural, vegetable fiber, gives only temporary relief.

BLACK DAWN

CHAPTER VIII

Dave whirled, his hand upon his gun butt. For just an instant he saw a face at the window, the face of a marked man. The pane was open, and the shot had been fired at a distance of about ten feet.

Dave drew and fired back almost upon the instant, but still too late. The face had already disappeared, and the shot merely whizzed across the house, over which the faintest light of dawn was just beginning to appear. Simultaneously Dave heard the sound of a body scrambling through the dense brush at the rear of the cabin.

Dave thrust his gun back into its holster and hopped toward the door. Stopped for an instant, turned back and looked at Hooker. The lamp upon the shelf cast only a faint reflection, but it was light enough for Dave to see that the old man's days were ended. Hooker's dream had come true.

In another instant Dave was through the entrance of the cabin and running across the mesa in the direction that the assassin had taken. He could still hear him, crashing through the undergrowth, but in the faint light of dawn Dave watched half a minute before he could find the trail. By the time he had done so, the murderer had mounted his horse and was galloping away down the mesa.

In the time Dave could get back and mount his bay there would be not the slightest chance of capturing the man, who was now disappearing in the tangled growth of jackpine that separated the upper mesa from the one beneath it.

Nevertheless, Dave ran back, forced it along the trail through the scrub and galloped to the mesa's edge. It was beginning to grow fairly light, but nothing was to be seen. This only living thing was the buzzard, harrier of death, still floating up the upper

LANCASTERS ON WAY TO ENGLAND

On their way from the government-owned Victory Aircraft Ltd., plant at Malton, Ont., where they were built, to the ferry command airfield at Dorval, Que., for delivery to England and the war front, three giant Lancaster bombers are pictured above circling Parliament Hill in salute to the Canadian Capital and the federal government buildings. The powerful aircraft circled over the city several times in formation.

The Lancasters were part of the November production at the Government-owned Victory plant, and are the first of the four ship ships of the famous "Boys Express," the first Canadian-built Lancaster, which recently figured in operations over Berlin.

With a wingspread of 102 feet, a 69-foot fuselage and a bomb load of eight tons, the greatest capacity is recognized as the largest, fastest and most devastating heavy bomber in existence today, require at least a three-month rene supply for mass abroad, a nine-month supply.

Merlin motors (the only parts not made in Canada), a Lancaster can hold 2,000 gallons of gasoline and its 33-foot bomb bay can accommodate a Spitfire without its wings.

In seeing the Lancaster trio, the people of Ottawa saw samples of the plane that has been described as one of the direct threats to the Axis yet devised by the greatest country-builders of the world.
