U-Boat Menace Not Yet Solved

Mr. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, spoke no less than the truth when he referred to Germany's U-boat campaign as he greatest of all our problems. It is a problem which has not yet been finally solved, although by their marvellous performances the Royal Navy and the Mercanile Marine have never let the U-boats get the upper hand.
It may be that the U-boat menace has passed the peak. It may be that it has yet to reach it. We o not know. What we must realize is that we cannot afford to exult prematurely, and that the weapon which is Hitler's last remaining hope of breaking the iron ring of Pritish seapower will be used with increasing savagery as his situation grows more desperate. It would be grossly unfair to our seamen-quite apart from the danger that always resides in unounded complacency—to under estimate what tremendous calls will be made on them before they can pronounce that the teeth of Germany's submarines have hoo

The outline of the Allied plan took shape. In the military field the task was to hold basic fronts—a strong line in Russia, a bastion in Britain, a new Pacific defense anchor in Australia In the Russia. in Britain, a new Pacific defense anchor in Australia. In the production field a wartime goal was of the global conflict as the two set by President Rousevelt for the world's mightiest industrial ma-chine. In the diplomatic field, the irformal alliance of the anti-aggressor nations became the formal pact of the United Nations, pledged to common victory.

It was Japan's month again. The dominating event was the fall of Singapore, the mighty anchor of the Allied defense line stretching across the Easiern seas to Pearl Harbor. The Rising Sun touched the zenith of it conquest in Java, Burma and the Australian islands. In the aggressors in the East had won 1,000,000 square miles of ter-ritory inhabited by more than 100,000,000 people. They held the world's most important sources of could seize the Caucasus, a terrible, perhaps mortal, blow would be inflicted on the Soviet. Major oil resources would be lost, the rubber, tin, quinine and hemp, as well as rich oil fields, inexhaustible supplies of foodstuffs, valuable iron, wolfram, manganese and copper deposits. They were bol-atered now for a long struggle.

The Allied world could only hope that the battles in Oceania The Allied world could only hope that the battles in Oceania and Asia were wearing down the Japanese, that the campaign in Russia was sapping German power. It cried for a shift from defensive to offensive strategy. The cry was premature. America's factories and training camps—the weight that might turn the battle—were still mobilizing for total was.

The greatest developments were on America's production front. In the words of Donald Nelson, America's production chief, "the decks had been cleared." The auto industry was the symbol. It had completed the ripping out of great peace ime conveyor belts, had in-stalle, machines to make guns, stalle; machines to make guns, tanks and planes.
