SPRING OFFENSIVE ON THE FARM FRONT-

FOOD is the most important and all pervading munition of war. Without food, war would be no more, and human life itself would become extinct. The accumulation of food stores before any offensive or other operation of war is the first imperative obligation of the successful military commander. He knows that, however brilliant his strategy may be, it is bound to fail without the bodily sustenance of his men through the orderly delivery of food at the right place and at the right time. Every detail of supply and transportation must be thought out in advance and co-ordinated. If the assembling of food entails such a responsibility on the military commander, what about the heavy load on the shoulders of the country's first great munitioner - the farmer who makes the assembly of food possible? In peace or war, year by year, the farmer undertakes a great Spring offensive. Everything has to be planned in detail. As in the armed forces, nothing in the preparation for success on the farm may be left to chance.

A year before each spring offensive some seed has to be sown. The growing of good seed is an art in itself and before the best seed has been selected, it has been checked and re-checked. When at last, the seed has been chosen, it has to be cleaned to clear it of weed seeds and reject inferior kernels. It has then to be tested for germination and purity. The seed is the ammunition; the farm machinery the field guns and heavy ordnance. The preparation of the soil parallels the choosing of the battleground on which victory may be best assured, but before the ammunition is used, it has been made certain that the "field guns" which sow seeds instead of shrapnel are in the highest working order. After the first wave of the offensive has passed, the heavy ordnance, in the shape of harvesters and threshers, all in first-class order, have been readied for the final push in the harvest. All is not plain sailing. There is fair weather and foul. There are hazards and heartbreaks, but the farmer carries on. Food just does not happen. Its successful growing is the triumph of the

VVVV SERVICE RECOGNIZED

MAN USUALLY receives his greatest reward in the knowledge of a job "well done." To the majority of our readers, it is a matter of accepted fact that Herb Roberts, a son of Walpole, has devoted his life faithfully to a service that would have daunted many a stronger heart He did not enjoy the faculties that is the blessing of most men, yet by study and devotion to duty he became a valuable man in the work he undertook to do. He has now been retired after thirty-eight years of faithful duty in the Postal Department in the City of Toronto, and the Testimonial which will now adorn his home will no doubt be fully appreciated by him.

It is significant that the present Post master General is the Grandson of Sir William Mulock, who personally wrote and invited Herb to join the Postal Service thirty-eight years ago. While Herrb Roberts has been denied, what we deem some of the great blessings of life, he has proved that man can find happiness and can win his rewards, when faithfulness to duty is applied.

It is true that Jarvis has an A therefore you would expect that EYE-WITNESS stories from the battle fronts—and death on duty of British, Canadian and United States war correspondents—have pointed up a fact of more than incidental that a plane can remain motionless that are far as making any importance in the history of our day. It is this in the air as far as making the urge in some men to use their years in tellthe urge in some men to use their years in telling people the day-to-day story of their own communities and far-away fields is a deeper thing, in the best of them, than the mere business of making a living by recording fact and rumor. It is the urge to search for truth and publish it to all.

Perhaps only in wartime it becomes clear that for a newspaperman to report what he is told about or what he has a second to the second that for a newspaperman to report what he is told about or what he has a second to the second the second to the second that for a newspaperman to report what he is told about or what he has a second to the secon
