PIAT GUN
Newest addition to the Canadian infantryman's arsenal is the Piat anti-tank weapon, the unorthodox but simple bomb-thrower that makes the soldier more than a match for the heavily armored tanks being thrown against him by the enemy in Italy. Called for official purposes a "projector, infantry and anti-tank," and deriving its name from the first letters of those four words, the Piat throws a bomb that explodes on impact and will penetrate four inches of the finest armor-plate. It is a house-breaking role. The Piat weighs only 24 pounds and can be handled easily by one man. Canadian soldiers overseas are already well trained in its use, while here in Canada most of the infantry training centres have courses on the Piat in full swing.

MURDER ON THE BOARDWALK
BY ELINORE COWAN STONE
Last Week: Newspapers brand Christine "Mystery Girl" of the murder. At her room she has a sheet of 1000 bonds hidden in her suitcase. She tries to Bill. He cuts her off with, "Bill Vardley's shoes fit the prints and by the police."
CHAPTER XI
"Oh, Bill—!" Christine cried miserably.
"And then some." His voice was grim. "But at any rate, I'm still in a situation. And I've got a little sleuthing of my own to do while I am. I'll be sewed up tight in a moment, but how about meeting me for lunch about 12:30 at the same place where we ate last night?"
Christine said, "I'll be there, Bill," and hung up, trembling a good deal.
But Inspector Parsons, she remembered after a moment, did not arrest people for murder until he was sure they would be arrested. And she had business with Inspector Parsons herself, as soon as she could find him.
Just outside her own front door she had to snub three reporters. She was not sufficiently experienced to dodge the news cameras.
Parsons was admitted to Inspector Christine through as if he had hardly slept, but he was as cool and alert as ever.
"I've come to tell you," she began, "that I've been a good deal of a fool."
"You—and several others," he agreed pleasantly.
"Last evening," Christine hurried on, "I went to a public reading by a clairvoyant called Chandrasekhar."
"And he told you," the inspector put in with a tired smile, "among a lot of other things you didn't believe any one but your self could possibly know, that you were going under an assumed name?"
"Why—yes," Christine admitted; "but he also told me something that may surprise even you, Inspector—that someone had disturbed my things at the Crestview."
"So you have called to tell me that it was Chandrasekhar who found so opportunely last night... A little late, isn't it?"
After a startled breath, Christine asked, "How do you know that it is he?"
"Practically every one in Surf City has seen that dagger. You drew his picture yesterday. Artists don't miss picturesque details like that... I wonder if you would be interested if I told you that two hours after that messenger between Amalgamated and National went through yesterday, this Chandrasekhar sold a piece of land he's been paying ruinous taxes on for years to the reorganized company, for a new plant they're planning."
"Then you've arrested him?"
"Not yet... That dagger was a little too obviously a planted clue."
Christine thought in sudden panic. Can he imagine that I put it there?
"It didn't occur to you, I suppose," she said, "that as shrewd a man as he might have planted it himself—guessing that the police would reason that way?"
"It did," the inspector told her wearily, "even after our medical officer told us that Mrs. Talbert was not established in that booth at all, but was brought there after the murder."
"Oh!" Christine said blankly. Then she rushed on in her eagerness to get on with her own errand. "But what I really came to tell you is that, when I did examine my things, I found these hidden away among them."
She pushed the envelope across his desk.
He opened it, rifled through the contents; then looked up, a frown between his brows.
"And," Christine finished hastily, "I haven't any idea who put them there or whose they are, if that's what you're going to ask."
He glanced from her to the papers and back again with such cool, mirrorlike amusement that Christine thought in sudden panic. Goodness! Leather Traveling He's found something I missed. I should have looked more carefully.
"You mean," the inspector demanded, "that you don't know that these bonds were the property of your cousin?"

It's Victory Canning Time Again!
There's one rule about canning that you'd best remember when you put up those jars of fruits and vegetables: "Two hours from garden to bottle." That means using only foods at the peak of condition, for you get out of your can only what you put into it.
If vegetables turn brown in their jars and look unattractive as compared with the fresh produce, it's probably because of overprocessing (overcooking) or lack of fresh vegetables when you started canning.
When you overcook those bright red berries, they can't possibly be fresh looking or taste like a reasonable facsimile of the original product. Follow directions and cook just long enough, and the result will be well worth the effort.
Ripe Sour Cherry and Currant
July
4½ cups juice
7 cups sugar
¾ bottle fruit pectin
To prepare juice stem, but do not pit, about 1½ quarts fully ripe cherries. Crush about 1¼ quarts fully ripe currants. Combine fruits; add ¾ cup water, bring to a boil, cover and simmer 10 minutes. Place fruit in jelly bag and squeeze out juice. Measure sugar and pectin into a large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over the hottest fire and at once add bottled fruit pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil ¼ ½ minute. Remove from fire, skim and pour quickly. Paraffin white top. Raspberry-Cherry Preserve
3 cups cherries
2 cups red raspberries
4½ cups sugar
Cook cherries in very little water until skins are tender. Add raspberries and sugar. Cook until thick and clear. Pour into sterilized jars and seal while hot.
Commercial pectin shortens the jelly-making process considerably and preserves the fresh fruit color and flavor in the finished product.
Three-Fruit Preserves
2 pints raspberries
2 pints strawberries
1 to 1½ pounds cherries
Equal amount of sugar by weight, of all fruits
Combine all ingredients and boil 2 minutes. Add ½ cup lemon juice and boil 2 minutes longer. Remove from fire and allow to cool. When cool, pour into sterilized jars and seal. Although through the preserving process considerably and preserves the fresh fruit color and flavor in the finished product. When you finish cooking, they will thicken upon standing.
except what's really back of it... Have you read the papers, Miss Thoresen?
"Yes," Christine told him, dreading she hardly knew what. "That is—the extra, after I left here early this morning."
"But," Christine hesitated, "if someone killed her for those, why wouldn't he keep them?"
"There are other reasons for murder besides robbery," Miss Thoresen. Suppose Mrs. Talbert was not killed for the bonds after all, but from any one of a number of other motives. In such a case, mightn't the guilty person reason that the smart thing to do was to make it seem as if she had been robbed by someone else—especially someone who might be thought to have a motive for the murder... You, for instance, Miss Thoresen—with a fortune at stake if she only is authentic."
When she only stared at him without speaking, he went on, "Or suppose the bonds do explain Mrs. Talbert's death, perhaps the murderer thought that, after the first shooting was over, he could get them from you as easily as he left them with you... Perhaps, he added softly, "it was even someone who counted on your keeping them safely for him."
"You—you can't believe that, Inspector Parsons."
"Frankly, I don't know what I believe except that finding these has completely changed the complexion of this whole business. I have been supposing that your cousin's death was tied up with her opposition to the Amalgamated-National merger. Now it begins to look as if it had only been very neatly timed to look that way—or planned to suggest anything."
