CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

Well, the last three days on Ginger Farm have been a little of the ordinary. One day we were to get ready to thresh; the next day we threshed, and today we are getting over it. Now there is plenty of grain in the bins to see to yet another winter. Threshing is really a marvelous thing. You see the sheaves go into the great maw of the feeder where by some intricate mechanism every grain goes into the bin to see to the back of the barn, the dust goes where the wind takes it. It is a dirty job and I never begrudge the work of getting good meals for the men—if they are a matter of opinion. I do the best I can even if sometimes they treat them badly. Yesterday, for instance, I forgot the bread at supper time. But I saw the men who forgot the pies. After the cut, but otherwise untouched, still on a side table in the dining room. When the table is so crowded with men, food and dishes, it is the easiest thing in the world to leave something out.

MEAT PATTIES WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Salads and cold cuts gone with the summer, Jack Frost is biting the faces of the last garden tomatoes. Are you having a bit of trouble keeping Fall meats down to budget size? It can be done, and in a mighty heavy way! Next time your purse strings start to tighten, pop these meat patties into the skillet, serve 'em garnish the meal with your favorite beverage and a rich and creamy pudding—and there you have something!

MEAT PATTIES WITH TOMATO SAUCE

1 egg
2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons minced onion
1 pound ground beef
1 cup milk
1/4 cup catsup
1 cup All-Bran

TOMATO SAUCE

2 1/2 cups canned tomatoes
1/2 teaspoon sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
dash cayenne pepper

Lightly brown onion in meat drippings. Stir in flour. Add tomatoes and seasonings, stirring constantly. Cook until thickened, about 15 minutes. Pour over meat patties.

CHAPTER IX

"Do you mind if I run downstairs and telephone, Peggy?" Nancy interrupted her. "I forgot to phone home that I arrived all right. You needn't come with me," she added slipping into a negligee. "I noticed tonight where the phone was."

"Oh, right on down then," Peggy urged. "I'll run in and say good night to Maxine while you're gone. She'll be surprised to see the hall to her sister's room when Nancy started down the stairs."

"That's the way I feel," Peggy declared, curling herself up on the foot of her sister's bed, and watching Maxine unpack her things and put them out into the room.

"First of all," Maxine continued, "I want to know about this young man you are going to marry. Of course, I realize that it is hard to understand things like this, but I understand them as we see them. Nevertheless, I would never want either of us to marry anyone of whom she disapproved. I honestly feel that Gran can judge people's characters better than anyone I've ever known. So I do hope he isn't someone she doesn't like. Have you told her anything about him yet, although you know how heavily it is hanging you. You needn't worry about Gran and the man I'm going to marry. Everything seems that everything is working out all right for me to go to England. Or is it, little Peggy? You see, I must know."

Peggy gulped. "Oh, yes, of course, Maxine. I am perfectly happy. I don't really care, but I don't know how heavily it is hanging you. You needn't worry about Gran and the man I'm going to marry. Everything seems that everything is working out all right for me to go to England. Or is it, little Peggy? You see, I must know."

Maxine eyed her sister searchingly, then leaning forward kissed her gently. "All right, baby, whatever you say. You know I trust your judgment and I know you wouldn't do anything ever that would cause either Gran or me any unhappiness."

Peggy felt that if she stayed there another minute she would be crying her heart out in her sister's arms.

"I must run back to Nancy now," she said jumping to her feet. "Good night. It's grand to have you here even for a short time. I know the English picture will be swell."

She got out of the room somewhat under the door of her grandmother's room she could see the faint flicker of a light. She wanted to slip in there and tell Mrs. Horton what she had done. This was the first time she had ever deceived her grandmother and her sister and it gave her a feeling of relief. It had seemed rather fantastic this morning, there in the road, planning with Harry to put something over on Nancy. But actually carrying out the plan she found was no fun at all. She had counted all afternoon on telling Maxine and letting her decide what to do, and now her engagement was just the thing Maxine was delighting in. Peggy threw back her head and laughed. "I'm in bed," Nancy replied. "Come on in." She sounded all right now. Evidently her telephone talk home had helped her. "Just a minute," Peggy called. "She must put Harry's ring away

Mr. Churchill Sang The Fourth Verse

In the wardrobe of one of H. M. ships, with Mr. Churchill on board, a sing-song was in progress. Prime Minister and officers joined in singing "Rule, Britannia," but after three verses there came a pause. "What about the fourth verse?" said Mr. Churchill. Nobody seemed to know it so Mr. Churchill sang it himself.

What is the fourth verse of "Rule, Britannia"? Mr. Richard Tobin, of the "New York Herald-Tribune," writing the story for his paper, made many inquiries, but nobody was able to quote the verse. The Muse, still with freedom loosed, Shall to thy happy coast repair, Blest isle, with matchless beauty crowned, And many hearts to guard the fair. Rule, Britannia, etc.

Don't Discard Jars With Screw-Tops

A practical storage jar with a screw-top and a fairly large mouth is a household help. But you are discarding them as you use them. Why not keep them for use as a good top to keep them free from moisture. The crusty end of bread loaves, toast left over from breakfast, and stale bread, may be run through the food chopper and stored for most loaf, scalloped dishes and the topping casserole dishes. Add the cracker crumbs left in the bottom of the box. At a glance you know just how much you have on hand. Perhaps you have herbs growing in one corner of your garden. The leaves of mint, marjoram, and basil, carefully dried and stored, are conveniently kept in small glass jars, labelled of course, so that half a teaspoon may be added to your turkey.
